Azariah C. Flagg, Secretary of State, then attended in the Assembly chamber, and duly administered to the members present, the oath prescribed by the sixth article of the constitution of this state.

The house then proceeded to choose by ballot, a Speaker; and the ballots having been taken and counted, it appeared that Peter Robinson was duly elected, and he was placed in the chair accordingly.

On motion of Mr. Savage,

Resolved, That Francis Seger be, and he is hereby appointed clerk to this house.

Thereupon,

The clerk took and subscribed the oath of office, and entered upon his duties as clerk.

On motion of Mr. Savage,

Resolved, That John C. Ellis be, and he is hereby appointed sergeant-at-arms to this house.

On motion of Mr. Ruggles,

Resolved, That James D. Scollard be, and he is hereby appointed doorkeeper of this house.

On motion of Mr. Savage,

Resolved, That Alonzo Crosby be, and he is hereby appointed assistant doorkeeper of this house.

On motion of Mr. Mann,

Resolved, That the rules and orders of the last house of assembly be adopted as the rules and orders of this house, until further ordered.

On motion of Mr. Edgerton—

Resolved, That the clerk of this house be directed to request the several clergymen of the city of Albany, having charge of congregations, to attend the opening of this house each morning by prayer, in such order as may suit their convenience.

Ordered, That Mr. Paige and Mr. T. L. Smith be a committee to wait upon the Governor, and inform him that this house has organized and is ready to proceed to business.

Ordered, That Mr. Bradish and Mr. Morell be a committee to wait upon the Senate with a like message.

On motion of Mr. Mann—

Resolved, That the clerk be directed to furnish to each member of this house, during the present session, such newspapers as they may respectively direct, not exceeding in price two daily papers, and defray the expenses out of the contingent funds of this house.

A message from the Senate, delivered by Mr. Viele and Mr. Hager, was received, informing that they were appointed a committee to announce to this house that the Senate had met and was ready to proceed to business.

Mr. Paige reported, that pursuant to the order of the house, Mr. T. L. Smith and himself had waited upon the Governor, and informed him that this house had met and was ready to proceed to business, and that the Governor had been pleased to say that he would immediately communicate his message to the Assembly.

Mr. Bradish reported, that pursuant to the order of the house, Mr. Morell and himself had waited on the Senate and informed them that this house had met and was ready to proceed to business.

A message from the Governor, delivered by his private secretary, was received and read, in the words following, to wit:

Fellow-Citizens of the Senate and Assembly:

I approach the high trust committed to my care, with a profound sense of the unmerited honor conferred upon me by the people, and an earnest solicitude to fulfil the obligations of gratitude which their favor has imposed. Associated with these feelings, is a consciousness of inferiority to that accomplished statesman, whose sudden removal from the post to which I have been called, excited the unfeigned regrets of the whole American People. These feelings are also greatly increased by the reflection, that my illustrious predecessor was himself preceded in this responsible station, by a succession of worthies, whose names and services are identified with the history of our state, and engraven upon the hearts of our people.

But relying, as I know I may, upon your able and patriotic co-operation; trusting to the indulgence of my fellow-citizens; and looking for direction and support to that kind Providence, by whose favor the humblest instrument may be made to accomplish the greatest ends, I pledge myself to you and our constituents, to make every effort of which I am capable, to promote the interest and advance the honor of the state.

In discharging that portion of the constitutional duty of the Executive, which consists in an obligation to communicate to the Legislature, at every session, the condition of the State, it is a source of sincere pleasure to have it in my power to congratulate you, upon the great and almost unmingled prosperity which we have enjoyed during the past year. It would be superfluous to dilate upon the particulars of the general welfare, when addressing you, who come directly from the bosom of society, with full opportunities of observing the condition of the state—a condition certainly not surpassed in all that makes a country prosperous and its people happy, and which demands, as it will assuredly receive, our humble and grateful thanks to the Giver of all Good.

An absence from the state for the greater part of seven years; the want of official or other opportunities, to make myself fully acquainted with that portion of its various interests subject to your particular care; together with a desire not to occupy more of your time by this communication than is necessary, will induce me to call your attention at present to such topics only, as are of paramount importance, and fall within the appropriate range of state legislation.

In relation to many of these topics, and indeed to all the great interests of the state, your duties will be greatly lessened by the entire revision of our statute laws, which has been so recently brought to a close. Of the success and usefulness of this great work, it would, perhaps, be premature to speak; but it is a satisfaction to know, that those who have had the best means of judging, and are well qualified to decide, concur in commending the distinguished ability with which it has been performed, and anticipate with confidence, that it will be a source of great and enduring benefit to the state. Some unavoidable embarrassments will probably be found in the incipient stages of its operation; but that our most sanguine expectations will be realized in the end, there can be but little doubt. The unsurpassed zeal and assiduity of the learned and capable revisers who have been employed in the work, and the great industry and patriotic devotion of the two successive legislatures who have passed upon their labors, have been witnessed by all, and are, in an eminent degree, entitled to the approbation and thanks of the state.

The first subject that naturally presents itself to your consideration, is the condition of the finances of the state. The public funds are, the General Fund, the Literature Fund, the Common School Fund, and the Canal Fund.

Since the year 1825, we have had no state tax of any description. The expenses of the government are charged upon a revenue principally derived from the General fund. The capital of that fund is $1,670,740. For a few years past, this revenue has not been sufficient to defray these expenses. It appears to have been the policy of the state, to supply this excess of expenditure over the income, by appropriating a portion of the capital of the general fund to that object, rather than resort to the renewal of the state tax, or the imposition of other direct burthens upon the people. It is left to the wisdom of the legislature, to sanction the policy of permitting, as has heretofore been done, this annual and necessarily increasing deficit, to be supplied by a corresponding reduction of the capital of the general fund; or to provide an addition to the present revenue, that shall make it fully equal to the charges upon it.

The Literature fund is $331,609.82; and its revenue for the current year, is estimated at $21,074.48. The management of this fund, and the distribution of its income, are entrusted to the Regents of the University; under such restrictions, however, as to make the incorporated academies, and seminaries other than colleges, subject to the visitation of the regents, the exclusive objects of this munificent benefaction.

The productive capital of the Common School Fund, is about $1,700,000. Although the revenue has not, in any past year, been quite sufficient to pay the appropriation of $100,000, directed by law to be annually distributed to the common schools, it is believed that it will exceed that sum the present year.

The income of the Canal Fund for the year which has just terminated, can not at this time be precisely ascertained; but it is estimated to be about $1,210,387; of which $833,000 have been derived from tolls. The compensation paid to the various officers employed on the canals, the interest on the canal debt, and the expenses for repairs and damages, have amounted to about $790,632.

The present canal debt is $7,730,155.99. No part of it is payable till 1837, and the greater part of it not till 1845 and 1846. Since the completion of the Erie and Champlain canals, the commissioners of this fund have been enabled, from its surplus revenue, to discharge $384,615 of the canal debt, by paying a loan that became due, and by purchasing and extinguishing a part of the stock of loans that are not yet reimbursable; and they have now on deposite, and invested in other stocks, $625,982. The revenue of the last year has been sufficient to defray the expenses of keeping the canals in a good condition; to pay the interest on the canal debt and the salaries of the officers and agents employed on them; and to yield a surplus of $419,055; and there is most abundant reason to anticipate a like favorable result for the present year.

It was reasonable to expect that the success which has so happily crowned our efforts in the great work of internal improvement, should lead to earnest solicitations for its continuance. Several applications embracing that object, have consequently been made to former legislatures, and will be renewed at the present session. The propriety of recommending them to your support, has been suggested to me, particularly by the friends of the State Road, and the Chemung and Chenango canals; objects which have already occupied the attention of the legislature, and excited a deep interest in the public mind.—The applicants for the Chenango canal, have transmitted to me a report from Mr. Wright, an engineer of great celebrity and acknowledged capacity. This report (which will doubtless be laid before you) is founded upon a review of the surveys, charts and estimates of other engineers, aided by a personal examination of the route of the canal, and throws new and very encouraging light upon that subject. But destitute as I am of that full and precise information, which alone would justify me in forming an opinion on particular applications, my duty, in the light in which I regard it, will be better discharged by submitting to you a general view of the considerations which ought to influence our deliberations.

In relation to the policy of applying such portions of the means of the state (including a judicious use of its credit) as can be spared from other necessary objects, to works of internal improvement, there can not, I think, be any serious diversity of opinion amongst us. Whatever attempts may be made to divide us into parties upon this subject, it is nevertheless true, that so great is the concurrence of opinion thereon, that it is extremely improbable that a single well-informed citizen can be found, who is justly obnoxious to the charge of hostility to measures of that character.

Differences of opinion do, it is true, exist, as to the source from which, according to the true construction of the federal constitution, rightful authority to prosecute works of this description, can alone proceed—as to the expediency of that authority being vested in the federal or state governments, arising from the supposed relative capacities of those governments to carry them on with advantage—and as to the practicability and expediency of particular schemes. It would be strange indeed, if diversities of sentiment upon these points were not to be found. But their existence in no degree militates against the general position I have advanced.

It deserves to be considered how far the claims now made in this respect, are fortified by the course which has been heretofore pursued.

The Erie and Champlain canals were undertakings of the greatest magnitude, involving, in their commencement, a hazard, and in their completion, a responsibility, on the part of the whole people of this state, of unprecedented extent. Although the advantages that have resulted from their construction are gradually diffusing themselves over almost every part of the state, it must in candor be admitted, that all are not equally benefitted by the facilities they afford. These considerations are relied upon, and not without reason, as justifying a claim, that the local advantages derivable from such improvements, should be equalized, as far forth, and as rapidly, as can be done, consistently with the localities and a proper regard to the ability of the state. We must not, however, be unmindful of the imperative obligation resting upon us, to observe the utmost prudence and circumspection in our legislation upon this delicate and vitally interesting subject. The success of this state in the commencement, prosecution and completion of her public works, has exercised an important moral influence over the conduct of our sister states. It has encouraged, and is still encouraging, similar efforts throughout the Union; and it is reasonable to apprehend, that a failure here, where so far, every effort has been crowned with success, would, in addition to our loss at home, be productive of serious injury to the cause of internal improvement throughout the country. Whilst, therefore, we should not shrink from incurring all reasonable hazards for the benefit of those of our fellow-citizens more immediately interested, no consideration, however imposing, should lead us to commit the interest and character of the state to the promotion of any undertaking, in the practicability of which there is not the clearest reason to confide, or which, when accomplished, would be of doubtful utility.

I can not dismiss this subject without adverting to the advantages it will receive from the liberality, moderation and unprejudiced coolness of your discussions. The feelings which characterize them, will be communicated to our constituents, and a more creditable as well as a more auspicious state of things produced, than has hitherto been witnessed. There can be no reason to doubt the disposition of any representative of the people, to aid in the improvement of any portion of the state, other than that which he more immediately represents, if his judgment can be satisfied of the feasibility of the proposed measure, and that the expense of its accomplishment, would correspond with its probable utility, and be suited to the means of the state. The free spirit of our political institutions, and those social and liberal feelings which should always distinguish our deliberations, allow him the exercise of his unbiassed judgment upon that point, leaving him responsible only for the purity of his motives and his fidelity in the discharge of his public duties. Any other course must be injurious to all the interests involved. If honest differences of opinion on these points, in regard to which there is frequently so much room for diversity, are allowed to alienate the affections of men, who, on other great subjects of public concern, adopt the same sentiments—if the means taken or attempted for the improvement of the state, are permitted to produce sectional jealousies and bitter local feuds—a state of feeling will be ultimately produced, destructive of the great object in view, and deeply mortifying to all who have the honor and prosperity of the state sincerely at heart.

It will doubtless be attentively considered, how far the public burthens arising from the construction of works of this character, may be relieved, and the efforts of the state judiciously aided, by the encouragement of individual associations for the same purpose. The leading case in which this policy has of late years been adopted, is that of the "Hudson and Delaware Canal Company." It gives me sincere pleasure to be able to inform you, that it has in this instance been crowned with the most cheering success. From the official statements of the company, confirmed by the personal inspection of two of the officers of the government, the Secretary of State and Comptroller, it appears that a canal, well adapted to the purposes for which it is designed, connecting the waters of the Hudson and Delaware rivers, extending eighty-one miles in the state of New-York, and nearly twenty-five miles in the state of Pennsylvania, commenced by that company in 1825, was fully completed in the month of October last; and that a rail-road of sixteen miles, designed to connect the canal with the valuable coal mines at Carbondale in the state of Pennsylvania, is in progress, and will probably be completed in the month of June next.

It is unnecessary that I should enlarge upon the advantages which are confidently anticipated from the construction of this work, not only to the section of the country through which it passes, but to other portions of the state, by the facilities it will afford to procure a cheap and valuable fuel; as the whole subject will be fully laid before you by the company, in support of an application which it is their intention to make at the present session. The cost of the canal is said to have been $1,875,000; of that sum, five hundred thousand dollars have been obtained upon the credit of the state, which holds for its security, the first lien upon the canal.

There is no reason to apprehend the slightest loss or inconvenience from the measure already adopted to assist this company. How far you can, consistent with other claims upon your favor, extend the relief they will ask, will, I am confident, receive an impartial examination and just decision at your hands.

The liberal endowments from time to time granted to our scientific and literary institutions, have added much to the character of the state, and reflected high honor on the enlightened counsels under whose auspices they were made. Although sometimes improvident, and occasionally unsuccessful, their general results have been highly auspicious to the great cause they were meant to subserve, and afford the strongest encouragement to a faithful perseverance in the same wise and liberal policy.

The more direct agency of the government in conducting the affairs of the common schools, as well as the more extensive range of usefulness that belongs to those very valuable elementary institutions, require a fuller statement of the different matters that appertain to that system, and concern its administration.

The returns in relation to them, exhibit the most gratifying results. The number of organized schools is 8,122; in which 467,947 scholars have been instructed during the past year, for an average period of eight months. The number of children between five and fifteen, in the same districts, is 439,127; shewing an excess of those instructed, over the whole number between five and fifteen, of 21,317. The increase since the last annual return, of those attending the schools, is 26,101; and of those between five and fifteen, is 20,211. The whole amount of public money paid to the districts during the same period, is $232,772.

The question as to the renewal of the bank charters which are about to expire, will deservedly receive your early and most deliberate attention. I do not, I think, deceive myself in believing that it must become the important business of your session, upon a wise and successful disposition of which, its credit with the people and usefulness to the state, will materially depend. Having for many years ceased to have an interest in those institutions, and declined any agency in their management, I am deeply conscious of my want of that sort of information, which is so important in forming an intelligent and safe opinion upon the subject. Thus impressed, I should have contented myself with simply bringing the subject to your notice, did I not feel bound to communicate freely and unreservedly, with those with whom it is my duty to act, on a matter of such vast magnitude to our constituents.

Of the forty banks now in operation in this state, the charters of thirty-one expire within one, two, three and four years, but chiefly within two and three years. From the best information that can be derived from the returns made by the banks whose charters are about to expire, their collective capital actually paid in, amounts to fifteen millions of dollars; and the debts due to them, to more than thirty millions. The debts due from these institutions to the community, including their stockholders, may be safely estimated at about the same amount.

As to the propriety of making a final disposition of the whole subject at the present session, there appears, so far as I can learn the public sentiment, to be but one opinion. The injurious consequences that may justly be apprehended from delay, seem to have impressed every mind, and to have produced a general expectation that the solicitude so properly felt upon this grave matter, will be relieved by your early decision.

Should your opinion correspond with this view of the matter, a question will arise as to the course which ought to be pursued under existing circumstances. The difference between that question in the present condition of things, and what it would be if you were called upon for the first time to lay the foundation of a banking system for the state, will readily occur to you. What might in that case be expedient, may now, from the length of time which the present system has been in operation, and the tendency which all pecuniary concerns have, to conform themselves to existing regulations, be found very difficult, if not not impracticable. To dispense with banks altogether, is an idea which seems to have no advocate; and to make ourselves wholly dependent upon those established by Federal authority, deserves none. If these are correct views, the only alternative would seem to be, between a renewal of the charters of the sound part of the existing banks, or to anticipate the winding up of their concerns by the incorporation of new institutions.

In support of the latter course, the idea of a state bank, with as many branches as public convenience would require, has been very properly thrown out for public consideration. If by a state bank is intended an institution to be owned by the state, and conducted by its officers, it would not seem to require much knowledge of the subject, to satisfy us that the experiment would probably fail here, as it has elsewhere. The reasons for this apprehension are so cogent in their nature, so constant in their operation, and of such ready occurrence to intelligent minds, that I shall not detain you by stating them.

Experience has shewn that banking operations, to be successful, and consequently beneficial to the community, must be conducted by private men, upon their own account. A state bank, with branches established upon the same principles, in other respects, as the present institutions, and in which the state should stand as a private stockholder only, would probably better subserve the interests intended to be promoted by the establishment of banks, than the present system; and if the question was a new, and in all respects an open one, would doubtless have many advocates. But we cannot close our eyes to the difficulties and pecuniary embarrassments that must result from suddenly stopping the operations of so many and such long established institutions. Of the thirty millions that are owing to them, the principal part is probably due from merchants, manufacturers, and other large dealers in their vicinity; but they in turn have their demands against persons pursuing similar business in the country, and those again must look to their customers; thus embracing all classes of society, in the liability to contribute towards a general settlement. The amount due from the banks, especially all that portion which consists in bills issued by them, would be found scattered through the whole community.

From even this superficial view of the subject, it must be evident to all reflecting minds, that the pecuniary convulsion that must result from a compulsory close of these extensive concerns, would be neither slight in its degree, or transient in its duration. You will, I am convinced, concur with me in the sentiment, that a responsibility of so serious a character, and so fearful in its possible consequences, should not be incurred on slight grounds, or from motives of expediency in the least degree questionable. Of the inducements to such a step, it is your right and your duty to judge; and I sincerely hope, as I firmly believe, that your constituents will, in the end, have reason to rejoice, that a trust so sacred has been reposed in hands so deserving.

If you should decide in favor of renewing the charters of those banks whose solvency and present capacity to discharge all their duties, shall, after a rigid and impartial scrutiny, be found free from doubt, it will become necessary to consider the conditions upon which the new grants ought to be made.

The policy heretofore pursued, of requiring the payment of a large bonus to the state, or the performance of some specious service, as the price of bank charters, is condemned by experience. A statement of the injurious consequences that have resulted from it, can not be necessary. The unbiassed judgment of all observing and thinking men, must concur in regarding it as an expedient, from which no good has resulted. Its tendency has been, and must always be, to weaken the security of the public in those institutions, for the performance of that in which the public interest mainly consists—the faithful redemption of their paper. Eager to obtain a charter, and stimulated by the golden harvest in view, they are most liberal in their promises. If these promises are performed, the capacity of the bank to redeem its paper is impaired, and the consideration that such incapacity is caused by the exaction of the government, not unfrequently leads to unreal dividends and fraudulent advances of the stock in the first instance, and to disreputable failures in the end; failures by which those classes of the community, who stand most in need of the protecting care of a good government, are usually the principal sufferers.

Strongly impressed by these considerations, I respectfully suggest the propriety of making all the conditions you prescribe, refer exclusively to the safety and stability of the institution.

The conceded difficulty of effecting that great object through the means proposed, should not deter us from the attempt. In all our deliberations upon this subject, we should keep constantly in view the important consideration, that the solvency of the banks, and the consequent stability of their paper, is the principal and almost the only point, in which the public has much interest. Who are the particular recipients of your favor, is a matter of minor importance. The number of the stockholders in comparison with the great body of the people, is so very small, and the stock is so constantly changing hands, that the equity of its original distribution becomes a comparatively unimportant matter. Our chief duty in this respect, is, to see that the farmer, when he exchanges his produce or estate—the mechanic his wares—the merchant his goods—and all other classes of the community their property or services for bank paper,—may rest contented as to its value.

Provisions invalidating all confidential assignments or trusts of any description, imposing severe penalties upon acts designed to divert the funds from the appropriation which in justice and policy ought to be made of them, are of value, but necessarily restricted in their operation. The importance of some more efficient safeguard, has been felt by former legislatures, and they have endeavored to obtain it through the medium of a personal responsibility of the stockholders. But it is objected, that the practical operation of such a provision would be, to defeat the object in view, by throwing this species of property, and of course its management, into the hands of irresponsible men. When it is considered that the dividends do not always, and seldom much, exceed the lawful interest—that the responsibility which the stockholders would necessarily have to place in others, would be disproportionate to the advantages secured, and that it is rarely, if ever, possible to reach the property of those who fail, through such means, it is greatly to be feared that the experiment, if tried, would be unsuccessful. The disastrous consequences necessarily flowing from such a result, need not be stated.

You will, I am persuaded, give the subject your utmost attention; and, by the application to it of your long experience in such matters, be able, I hope, to devise some mode by which the public interest will be secured. It is unnecessary that I should say, that any plan that is proposed by you, that shall be preferable to those to which I have referred, shall receive my cordial and cheerful co-operation.

My own reflections upon this point, have derived much assistance from a sensible and apparently well considered plan that has been submitted to me, and which will, in due season, be laid before you. I have every reason to believe that the suggestions come from a disinterested source, and have the public good for their leading object. The limits of this communication will not allow me to do justice to its details, or to the argument by which it is supported. It proposes to make all the banks responsible for any loss the public may sustain by the failure of any one or more of them. It suggests provisions by which that result may be reached, as far as it respects the banks whose charters are about to expire, and be ultimately made universal, or nearly so. The idea is not entirely new to the commercial world, although it has not heretofore been applied in this form. Most men will, upon the first impression, view it, as I certainly did myself, as presenting a rigorous condition. But it is confidently believed by competent judges, that the form in which it is proposed to enforce the responsibility—being an annual and adequate appropriation of a part of their income towards a common fund, to be placed under the control of the state—the ample supervision over the institutions, which it proposes to place under the direction of the contributing banks, in conjunction with the authority of the state—the consequent high character and correspondent circulation it would give to our paper—the expulsion from circulation of the doubtful paper which now engrosses it, and the substitution in its place of that issued by banks in full credit—with other advantages, would make the condition such as would, upon more full consideration, be deemed admissible by all concerned. But of all these matters you will judge for yourselves. Every scheme submitted to you, should undergo the severest scrutiny; because, from the nature of the subject, a mistake committed in regard to it, must be more injurious than in relation to any other matter.

Our duties in this great concern, may truly be said to be full of delicacy, and surrounded by difficulties. But it is our consolation to know, that if the field of duty is beset with dangers, there are enduring honors that lie beyond it. The interest which attaches itself to the representative character, can never be greater than when a fulfilment of the trust committed to the representative, may bring him in conflict with the claims of the great monied interests of the country. Where can we find a political exhibition more truly gratifying, than to see the faithful public servant, after having turned away every approach, and put far from him every sinister consideration that could divert him from the discharge of his duty, return to his constituents, conscious that he deserves, and feeling that he possesses, their unabated confidence? I sincerely hope that such may be the good fortune that awaits our conduct. We have every thing to stimulate us to perseverance and fidelity. We are members of a state that is rapidly progressing in improvement, in public spirit, and in all the attributes of a great and flourishing republic—a state, of which, without exposing ourselves to the imputation of vanity, we may be proud to call ourselves citizens. We shall, I trust, shew ourselves worthy of this exalted privilege, by guarding, with sleepless vigilance, its interests, its honor, and its future glory.

Allow me also to call your attention to another subject, in which the state has an interest that deserves your notice. I allude to the duties derived from sales at auction. The amount of revenue received from that source during the last year, is two hundred and fifty-seven thousand one hundred and eighty-seven dollars and forty cents; and for the last five years, has amounted to one million three hundred and nine thousand seven hundred and sixty-eight dollars and eighty cents. Its appropriation for the latter term, has been as follows: To the canal fund, one million one hundred and forty-two thousand two hundred and sixty-eight dollars and eighty cents; to the hospital in the city of New-York, one hundred and twelve thousand five hundred dollars; for the support of foreign poor in that city, fifty thousand dollars; and five thousand dollars to the Economical School and Orphan Asylum.

A numerous and very respectable class of our citizens, who think themselves aggrieved by the existing regulations, have applied to congress for the imposition of a federal duty of ten per centum, with the avowed design of destroying the business altogether. It is respectfully submitted, whether the amount of revenue derived from this source by the state; the valuable purposes to which it is appropriated, and the difficulty of supplying its place, should not induce you to consider, whether measures may not be adopted by you, which, whilst they save the interests of the state, would at the same time respect those of the complainants.

The leading objection that is made to the present system, is, that the business of selling goods at auction, in the mode now practised, is, to every essential purpose, the occupation of a merchant; and that therefore sales by auction, as regulated by our law, constitute a monopoly, securing all the advantages of that branch of trade to a few individuals, to the exclusion of the rest of the community. Whatever reasons may have existed at the commencement of our system, for making the privilege of selling by auction exclusive, they are certainly not very apparent at the present day. Fully convinced of the general injustice and inexpediency of commercial monopolies, and apprehending that there is reasonable cause to regard sales by auction, as at present regulated, objectionable on that score, I respectfully submit to your consideration the policy of so modifying the existing law, as to allow every citizen, who can give security for the duties, to sell at auction by wholesale only, upon a license to be obtained from some proper tribunal, to be for that purpose designated and empowered by law. Such is now the law in several of the largest states; and there is no reason to believe that their regulation has been less advantageous than ours.

That such a provision, whilst it secured and probably improved the revenue of the state, would obviate the leading objection that is made to the present system, is undoubted. It would not, however, of itself, reach all the grounds of complaint that are urged. Many of them consist of alleged mal-practices.

in the mode of conducting those sales, which may be reached, and can only be remedied, by state legislation. Those who object to the present system, do, it is true, attribute to it other injuries to trade, and of a character which could not be reached by any law that you could pass, short of an entire prohibition of sales by auction. The allegations that are made in this respect, may all be well founded; and the respectability of the source whence they have proceeded, leaves no doubt of the sincerity with which they have been advanced. But those who make them, are too enlightened not to be sensible, and would be too candid not to admit, how often it is, that we find measures that have become obnoxious to any portion of the community, made responsible for results which, it is found in the sequel, they have had no agency in producing. This may be so in the present case; and it would at all events seem to be in season, after an experiment of the effect of the alteration now suggested, to consider what further provision is necessary, and may be adopted, with a just regard to the interests of all.

I should disregard the admonitions of recent experience, and fail in my duty, were I not to bring to your notice the state of the laws by which our elections are at present regulated.

At our last election, there were polled more than 276,000 votes; a number nearly double to that of any other state in the confederacy, and constituting the largest free suffrage of any single government in the world. To protect the freedom, preserve the purity, and regulate the exercise of such a suffrage, deserves to be ranked among the leading objects of our care. The range that is given to the influence of this privilege by our system, has no other limit than the extension of political power. Wherever the one exists, the other is felt also. Thus reaching from the chief magistrate of the Union, to the most inconsiderable municipal officer, its discreet exercise must of necessity frequently involve principles of action of a character entirely dissimilar. In some cases, great and difficult questions of national and state policy are put at issue; whilst in regard to others, it is a mere dispute as to the relative capacities of individuals for the discharge of specific duties. It is not to be hoped that electors coming to the polls under the pressure of such dissimilar motives, will exercise their privileges as discreetly as might, under different circumstances, be expected. But we are not left to conjecture upon the subject. We have complaints from numerous sources, of the injurious consequences that have resulted from the practice of choosing our federal, state, and county officers at the same time—a practice which is pursued in no other state in the Union. Many instances may be referred to, where the public mind has been wholly engrossed by the election of a county or town officer, whilst the subject of President of the United States was in a great degree lost sight of. Allow me, therefore, to suggest for your consideration, the propriety of amending our election law, in this particular, so far at least, as to direct the choice of electors of president and vice-president to be held at a time different from any other election. Recent events have made so strong an impression on the public mind, and provoked so free a discussion, in relation to our present district system for the choice of electors, as to render any observations from me unnecessary to secure your prompt attention to that subject.

There is another matter connected with this subject, of a still graver character, and upon which I must ask to be indulged in a few observations. I allude to the extent to which the use of money at our elections, has increased within a few years. I do not mean to affirm, that as yet direct corruption has to any extent been practised; on the contrary, I hope that such has not been the case, nor is it necessary that the evil should have arrived at that height to require your interposition. The practice of employing persons to attend the polls for compensation, of placing large sums in the hands of others to entertain the electors, and the various other devices by which the existing laws are evaded, the cupidity of the electors strongly tempted, their principles undermined, and the elective franchise, the most valuable of all our temporal privileges, brought into disrepute, is too well known to need description. I cannot refrain from pressing the existence of these practices upon your consideration, as an evil of the greatest magnitude. Of the salutary agency of this privilege in the purification of our public councils, and its indispensable necessity to the maintenance of public liberty, no citizen can be insensible; and we should all be alive to the obligation that rests upon us, whose enjoyment of it is so unlimited, to preserve it from the dangers to which it may at any time be exposed. The allowance of such means is giving to wealth a superiority over virtuous mediocrity, that should excite apprehensions in the mind of every real friend to the equal rights of man. If the expenses of our elections continue to increase with the same rapidity that they have done for some years past, the time will soon arrive when a man in middling circumstances, however virtuous, will not be able to compete, upon any thing like equal terms, with a wealthy opponent. The evil is certainly within the reach of legislation. Evasions of any law that you may pass, will, without doubt, take place; but their range can be greatly circumscribed, by the discreet and intelligent action of the legislature. I respectfully submit it to your consideration, whether a law which should impose severe and enforceable penalties upon the advance of money by individuals, for any purposes connected with the election, except the single one of printing, would not be salutary in its consequences, and is not called for by the deep interests that our constituents have in the subject?

It is unnecessary to say that these observations are not intended to have reference to any one class of men, more than another. If injurious practices have existed in this respect, it is not probable that they have been confined to any description of politicians.

I transmit herewith a report from Mr. Mosely, who was, in pnrusuace of an act passed in April last, and which will expire in May next, appointed special attorney, to make certain inquiries and perform certain duties, in relation to the abduction of William Morgan. Of his fate we have as yet no positive evidence; but it is certain that the laws of the state have been violated in his person, if not the highest crime committed. That an act so alarming in its character—so destructive of the peace of society, and the safety of its members—should have made a deep impression upon the public mind, ought not to surprise us. It would have been an unfavorable indication of the state of our public morals, and our respect for the laws, had it been otherwise. We have accordingly witnessed an excitement upon the subject, of great interest and extent, amongst a portion of our citizens, greatly and justly distinguished for their piety, industry and intelligence. It would not be extraordinary if attempts should be made to pervert this honest indignation of the people, to selfish and sinister purposes. But the character of those who really feel what they profess upon this subject, affords the best security, that the success of such unworthy schemes cannot be great, or of long duration.

It is the duty of those to whom the people have delegated the sacred trust of executing their laws, to see that no constitutional means are left unemployed, that may contribute to exonerate the innocent, and satisfy the requirements of the law, by bringing down judgment and punishment upon the heads of the guilty. Whatever portion of those duties devolves upon me, shall be discharged with diligence and fidelity. It will be for you to consider whether, to that end, any further legislation is necessary.

An opportunity was recently presented to me, through the politeness of the managers of the Society for the reformation of juvenile delinquents, to visit the house of refuge established by that society in the city of New-York. The public are indebted for the original establishment of this institution, to the benevolence of the association; and it has subsequently, in consequence of its obvious and great usefulness, and the extension of its operations to the state at large, received the patronage of the legislature. Of its salutary agency in promoting the objects of its establishment, there can be no doubt. The nature of this communication will not allow me to present you a more particular statement of its beneficial results, but they will be fully laid before you by the society, on an application which it is their intention to make for your interposition. The nature of the relief to be asked, is such as will enable the institution to conduct its operations with more stability and success, without, as the managers suppose, materially increasing the present allowance made by the state. I should do injustice to my convictions of duty, if I failed to recommend this praiseworthy establishment to the protecting care of the legislature. Permit me also to suggest for your consideration, the expediency of extending this system throughout the state, under such modifications as may be thought proper.

I have been requested to present to your notice, the condition of several of the numerous institutions for the promotion of literature, science and the arts, with which our state happily abounds. Some have desired it with a view to applications they design to make for your assistance, and others from the laudable motive of bringing into more general notice, the success with which their meritorious labors have been rewarded. I have to regret that the necessary limits of this message, put it out of my power to comply with their wishes. Such as require it, will be noticed in subsequent communications, together with several other matters of public concernment upon which it may become your duty to act.

The abiding obligations to do every thing within the range of our respective authorities, to protect the great interests of agriculture, commerce and manufactures, will, I am confident, be duly respected by you. In relation to the former and most important of these interests, I have been solicited to renew a suggestion made by my predecessor, submitting to the legislature the propriety of granting a bounty for the encouragement of the growth of hemp. Of the effects that will be produced upon the latter by the act of congress passed for its relief at the last session, it would, I am convinced, be yet premature to judge. If its operation can derive aid from any legislation on your part, or any other advantage be obtained, it will, I am well satisfied, be your pleasure, as it will be your duty, to afford all the assistance in your power, to this great and valuable interest.

The great importance of a full and extensive publication of those parts of the Revised Statutes, which are of more general application, and in respect to which, the most important alterations have been made of the existing laws, can not fail to occur to you, and will, I hope, receive your early attention.

My elevation to the station which, by the favor of the people, I now enjoy, makes it necessary that I should resign the office of senator in the congress of the United States. You will, therefore, please to regard this as my resignation of that high office; and allow me to accompany it with an expression of my sincere thankfulness for the undeserved honor conferred upon me by two successive appointments, and my regret that it has not been in my power to make myself more useful in the discharge of its important and responsible duties. The nature of those duties are so well understood, and so fully appreciated, that it is scarcely necessary that I should ask you, in supplying the vacancy, to remember, that there are but few if any public stations in this country, presenting a fairer field for the successful exercise of great talents and sound patriotism, than that now referred to.

Allow me, in conclusion, to submit some observations of a more general character. That a jealousy of the exercise of all delegated political power, a solicitude to keep public agents within the precise limits of their authority, and an anxious desire to see all public expenditures under the control of a rigid and scrupulous economy, are indications of a contracted spirit, unbecoming the character of a statesman, is a sentiment that most men at some period of their lives, are prone to entertain. I can not claim to have been always exempt from its influence. But the limited experience which it has been my fortune to have in public affairs, has abundantly satisfied me that it is a political heresy, which can not be too soon or too effectually exploded.

It was truly said by one of my predecessors in office, who was one of the most distinguished and efficient of the civil patriots of the revolution, that "few "circumstances are more essential to the duration of civil liberty and the well-"being of a free people, than that the departments and officers of the govern-"ment do, on the one hand, exercise on proper occasions, all the powers "and authorities constitutionally committed to them; and on the other hand,

"that they do not exercise on any occasion, powers and authorities which are "not constitutionally committed to them." The enforcement of these excellent and saving principles, so far as they relate to most of the departments of the government, rests with you, and with the right is the duty to exercise it.

It is also a truth, confirmed by the experience of this, as well as every other country, that no people are so well served, as those whose laws exact the most strict accountability from their public servants, and enjoin frugality in expenditures as a cardinal political virtue. Acting upon these principles, I do not hesitate, in fulfilment of the duties imposed upon me by the constitution, to recommend to you the propriety of a faithful survey of the existing laws relating to the powers and duties of public officers, and the enforcement, as far as possible, of strict conformity to their provisions—of limiting, as far as practicable, the range of official discretion, always remembering, that as a general rule, it can not be confided to any one, without danger of abuse—of ascertaining whether the securities now required from those entrusted with public monies, may not be increased—of making the instances in which the government releases those, who, forgetful of the sacred character of their trust, wrongfully apply the public funds to their own use, as rare as may be consistent with the claims of humanity—and, generally, of compelling a vigilant accountability, and strict economy in the public disbursements through all their ramifications. There is no reason to apprehend impediments to a successful administration of the government, through unreasonable jealousies upon these points. As long as public sentiment, the great lever of our political machine, remains as now, intelligent and patriotic, we need not fear that any measure with which the public interest is essentially connected, will fail of support.

Let me not, however, be understood as inculcating any thing like parsimony or injustice of any description, towards the servants of the public. The difference between that course and the one I have referred to, is wide and palpable. Although it is incompatible with the spirit of our political system, that the emoluments of office should be such as to enrich the incumbents, it is nevertheless due to its character and preservation, that our public functionaries should receive a just equivalent for the services they render. It is your province to decide whether such is now, in all respects, the case. I have no reason to believe that the gross amount received by the public officers of this state, is not an adequate recompense for their services; but I am fully persuaded that the compensation allowed by our laws, is unjustly and unequally distributed. The salaries paid to the chancellor and judges of the supreme and circuit courts, in particular, is less than what is paid to judges of the same grade in several of the states of the Union; and considering the expenses to which they are unavoidably exposed, I fear insufficient to save them from actual loss. I do not believe that our constituents could reconcile it to that strong sense of natural justice, by which they are influenced, to receive the entire services of any of their fellow-citizens, without yielding them a compensation at least sufficient for their support; and I am yet to learn, that they would wish to see a rule applied to their public concerns, of which they would not approve in those that are personal. I have therefore no hesitation in saying, that any bill which shall correct the inequality that at present exists, and place the salaries of those to whom I have particularly alluded, upon a just footing, shall receive my cordial concurrence.

The relation in which we stand to the Federal Government, occasionally imposes upon us the discharge of delicate and highly responsible duties. Of the invariable disposition of this state to sustain the federal arm, in the exercise of all its constitutional power, it would be superfluous to speak; it has been fully exemplified both in peace and in war. But whilst we thus evince our unabated loyalty to the general government, we must not be unmindful of our obligations at home, or forget that it is only to the principles upon which the confederacy was based, and which were intended to be enforced by the provisions of the federal constitution, that our support is justly due. As the theory of our general government was without precedent, its practical operation could only, at the period of its formation, be matter of conjecture. The motives of those who framed it, were, doubtless, of the purest and most elevated character. The great question that was agitated by them, was the distribution of the powers necessary to good government between the federal and state authorities; and the conflicting speculations of the men of that day, as to what was to be hoped and feared, from those respective sources, divided them into parties, which have continued without material alteration to the present period. The experience of forty years has vindicated and fully sustained the opinions and principles of those, who, at that time, insisted that the tendency of the system would be to encourage encroachments by the federal power upon that of the states. That tendency may well be regarded as the imperfection of our otherwise most happy system, and deriving force from principles of a kindred character, it may always be expected to disturb it. But it is at the same time gratifying to have witnessed a willingness as well as a capacity on the part of the people to resist such encroachments as often as their existence becomes manifest. Of that disposition and capacity our political history records at least two prominent and illustrious instances. As long as the good spirit that triumphed on those memorable occasions is preserved, the republic will be safe. That it may always be preserved, should be the unceasing prayer of every patriot. The state governments have been justly described, by one of the best of men, as "the most competent administration for our domestic concerns, and the surest bulwarks against anti-republican tendencies"—and it is among our highest duties as the representatives of a state, certainly not the least considerable of the number, to exercise the greatest vigilance in their preservation. That those who are either regardless of the success of the republican principle, or whose love for it is merged in other considerations, should decry the solicitude that is manifested upon this subject, and seek to discredit its authors, is naturally to be expected. But the sincere friends of our hitherto successful system, may well find consolation in the fact, that its defenders are neither to be deterred or intimidated by such efforts, and that the people have sustained, and will again and again, support them.

The influence of the recent contest for the Presidency, upon the success and permanency of those principles, must, for a long time to come, be of a very decisive character. Of that great struggle, it may truly be said, that if it brought with it much to regret, it has also afforded subjects for congratulation, without reference to its particular result. Ours is the only nation in the world which can fairly be said to enjoy the high privilege of selecting its chief magistrate, by the unbiassed choice of its citizens. That the exercise of a right, so interesting in its character, and so important in its results, would disturb the body politic in all its relations, was to have been anticipated, and in the present instance, has been fully realized. It is certainly true, that the reputation of the country has in some degree suffered from the uncharitable and unrelenting scrutiny to which private as well as public character has been subjected. But, on the other hand, the injury produced by this discreditable exhibition has been relieved, if not removed, by seeing how soon the overflowing waters of bitterness have spent themselves, and that already the current of public feeling has resumed its accustomed channels. These excesses are the price we pay for that full enjoyment of the right of opinion, which is emphatically the birthright of an American citizen. It is with perfect deference to that sacred privilege, and in the humble exercise of that portion of it which belongs to myself—with a sincere desire not to offend the feelings of those whose views in this respect differ from my own—that I beg leave to congratulate you, and through you, our constituents, on the result of the late election for President and Vice-President of the United States: A result which, while it infuses fresh vigor into our political system and adds new beauties to the Republican character, once more refutes the odious imputation that Republics are ungrateful; dissipates the vain hope that our citizens can be influenced by aught save appeals to their understanding and love of country; and finally, exhibits in bold relief, the omnipotence of public opinion, and the futility of all attempts to overawe it by the denunciations of power, or to seduce it by the allurements of patronage.

MARTIN VAN BUREN.

Albany, January 6, 1829.

MR. MOSELEY'S REPORT.

To His Excellency the Governor of the State of New-York:

The undersigned having received a commission from the executive department of the government, under the act passed on the 15th April, 1828, deems it proper, as well to comply with what may be considered an implied requisition of the law imposing special duties, as to meet a resonable public expectation, to report to that department the progress which has been made under it, so far forth as the present condition of the subject renders it practicable.

In proceeding to "institute inquiries concerning the abduction of William Morgan, and his fate subsequently thereto," as enjoined by the act, the first question which presented itself was, whether the statute contemplated an original and primary course of legal prosecution, or to embrace the subject in its subsisting condition? At the time of the passage of the law, one indictment in relation to the transaction, had already been brought to a successful termination, and others had been recently presented before the proper tribunals. To disregard these and commence anew, would seem to be a work of supererogation, and to a certain extent, would render the law ex post facto in its operation. The alternative was to proceed with the investigation in the suits already instituted, and this has been done in those cases in which there was good reason to believe they were founded upon a sufficient legal basis.

In relation to the first branch of the inquiry, the prosecutor has proceeded with as much diligence as the facilities afforded by the organization of the courts of law would admit.

One indictment has been tried, which resulted in the conviction of the party charged, and in which suit a question of law is reserved for the decision of the supreme court. At the sittings of the court of oyer and terminer in and for the county of Niagara, in November last, several other causes were prepared and ready for trial, but which were necessarily postponed, upon the application of all of the defendants, in consequence of the absence of witnesses whose testimony was proved to be material. Two other indictments have been delayed in consequence of the sittings of courts in different counties in the same week, and the intrinsic difficulties attending them. However desirable it might have been to have brought this investigation to a close during the current season, the delay arises from the necessary imperfections of human systems, a sacred regard to the principle, that every one is presumed to be innocent until his guilt is established, and the preservation of rights, which men, though charged with crime, may constitutionally protect.

The voluminous nature of the testimony taken would seem to forbid its introduction into a communication of this kind; besides it is somewhat inchoate, and would be ex parte in its statement. Certain facts, however, appear to be affirmatively established. In pursuing their investigations in the physical sciences, men yield not their assent to propositions until their truth is evidenced by experience or demonstration. But in asserting civil rights, and in the conviction and punishment of offences against the laws, we necessarily resort to and rely upon human testimony. When this goes to establish a fact beyond reasonable doubt, it entitles itself to belief, and upon this foundation rest our civil institutions.

From testimony thus disclosed, it appears, that William Morgan, a citizen of this state, was taken from the gaol of the county of Ontario, into which he had been committed under circumstances of peculiar aggravation and cruelty; and was from thence transported, under duress of imprisonment, a distance of about one hundred and twenty miles, to the county of Niagara, and was placed in confinement in the Magazine in Fort Niagara, situated at the confluence of the Niagara river with Lake Ontario, on the morning of the fourteenth of September aforesaid.

Here are the boundaries of the testimony. As to "his fate subsequently thereto," it is not yet developed; nor can it be anticipated, with much confidence, to be judicially determined, by any tribunal over which men have controul.

It is not believed to be within the legitimate purpose of this report, to speak of societies or denominations of men, but of men as individuals, citizens of a commonwealth. As such, and many of them acting in concert, upon their own responsibility, they manifested the deliberate purpose of withdrawing the subject of these inquiries from the protection of the laws and the government under which he lived, and subjecting him to the controul of themselves, and to be placed at the mercy of their own passions. He had offended against no law, recognized in the code of any civilized nation; and was taken away without any legal process or pretence of authority.

At the time of the commission of this offence, and until the passage of the law of 16th April 1827, by which similar offences were made felony, and punishable by imprisonment in the state prison not exceeding fourteen years, it amounted only to a misdemeanor. Three of the agents in the transaction were subjected to trial soon after its occurrence, and promptly met the retributions of the law, at a court of oyer and terminer held in January 1827, and were sentenced to imprisonment in the county gaol for different periods; the term of one of which is yet unexpired.

From this statement, it will be perceived what progress has been made under the act; and, so far as the testimony warrants, the nature of the transaction.

It ought to be remarked, that the situation of some of the witnesses on the part of the prosecution, is such as to present the question whether pecuniary relief ought not to be afforded. I allude to that class of witnesses, who, it is believed, do not come within the letter, nor perhaps the spirit of the law, making provision for the payment of witnesses unable to support themselves. Though not in a situation to avail themselves of that statute, yet the frequency of their attendance at court, and at great distances from home, has subjected them to expenses which they are illy able to defray.

Which is submitted with the highest respect,

By your obedient servant,

DANIEL MOSELEY.

A communication from the revisers of the statute laws of this state, was received, and read, in the words following, to wit:

To the Honorable the Legislature of the State of New-York:

The undersigned, in behalf of the revisers of the statutes of this state, beg leave respectfully to report:

That by a resolution of the house of assembly, of the 30th of October, 1828, the petition of sundry inhabitants of the town of Schroon, in the county of Essex, praying for an alteration of the revised statutes relating to the assessment and collection of taxes in respect to the said town, was referred to the revisers; but by the pressure of other duties, they were prevented from reporting thereon at the last meeting of the legislature.

The undersigned have examined the said petition, and they find that the petitioners are desirous that the law should be so altered, as to provide that the warrant of the collector of the said town of Schroon, should direct him, in the first place, to pay to the supervisor of the town, out of the monies collected, such sum as may be required to defray the expenses of the town officers, so as to enable the town officers to discharge their taxes, and to relieve them from the delay to which they are now subjected in the payment of their charges; and the petitioners also suggest, that it may perhaps be expedient to authorise the supervisors to make the like arrangement for any other town in the county of Essex.

The undersigned do not perceive any good reason for such an alteration of the existing law, especially as its operation would be local; but as the propriety of granting the prayer of the petitioners, is a question which belongs exclusively to the legislature, they abstain from any remarks upon that subject.

All which is respectfully submitted.

B. F. BUTLER,
JOHN C. SPENCER.

Mr. Bradish, from the committee appointed to revise the rules and orders of this house, reported:

That in discharging the duty assigned them, the committee have taken mainly, as their guide, the rules and orders of the last House of Assembly. These generally, with some modification in their expressions and a change in their order, have been adopted. The change of order has been made with a view to bring together the several rules relating to the same subject, and thereby produce an arrangement which would facilitate a reference to the rules, and be more favorable to a perfect understanding of them.

In preparing the proposed 1st, 19th, 20th, 34th, 35th, 36th and 37th rules, which are new, the committee have been influenced by various considerations, some of which they beg leave to submit to the house.

The latter part of the proposed first rule, embraces a case not provided for in the rules of the last House of Assembly. Yet that is a case which not only may, but does often actually occur, and for which it has been thought some provision should be made. The committee are aware that the amended constitution of the state declares, that "a majority of each house (of the legislature,) shall constitute a quorum to do business;" and that it may perhaps thence be inferred that less than that number can do no valid act whatever. This would undoubtedly be true in regard to any legislative act; but the powers proposed to be given by the clause in question of this proposed rule, are merely police powers, absolutely necessary in the case contemplated by the rule, and are, it is believed, included in the general power expressly given to this house by the constitution, that "of determining the rules of its own proceedings." If the powers in question be denied, then it would follow that if at any time during the sitting of the house, there should not be present a constitutional quorum to do business, the house by that simple fact, would be dissolved, and the members present could neither remedy the evil by taking measures to compel the attendance of absent members, nor could they adjourn. It is to provide for such a case, that the committee have prepared this rule, which they believe to be fairly within the constitutional powers of this house.

It will be perceived that the 9th subdivision of the proposed 2d rule, is a modification of the 41st rule of the last house of Assembly. It changes the order of business so far as to give the unfinished business of the preceding day, priority of the special orders of the day. This change, the committee believe, will in practice be found useful. The reasons for this opinion will be apparent upon a moment's consideration of the subject. Let it be supposed that there is a special order of the day for Tuesday, and another for Wednesday. That on the preceding Monday, the house go into committee of the whole upon a general order of the day, and that the committee rise without having disposed definitely of the subject. This would, therefore, on Tuesday be unfinished business of the preceding day, and would, under the existing rule, be postponed to the special order of the day for Tuesday. Suppose the house to follow the existing rule, and to go into committee of the whole upon the special order of the day, and the committee to rise without having disposed definitely of this special order; it would of course be, on Wednesday, unfinished business of the preceding day, and must be postponed to the special order of the day for Wednesday. This special order is taken up and acted on in committee of the whole, but not finally disposed of. It would, therefore, on Thursday morning be unfinished business of the preceding day; and if there be no special order of the day for Thursday, would be taken up and acted on in preference to unfinished business generally, or the general orders of the day. Thus, it will be perceived, that by the operation of the existing rule, the special order of the day for Wednesday has gained precedence of the special order of the day for Tuesday, and the intentions of the house defeated by its own rule. This seems exceedingly incorrect in principle. It is no less inconvenient in practice.—Whereas under the operation of the proposed rule, business would be definitively disposed of in the order in which it is taken up, and the house would thereby avoid the evil which must frequently arise under the existing rule, of having under its consideration at the same time, several distinct subjects partially discussed. The undivided attention of the house would thus be given to a single subject, which would be definitely disposed of while its merits were fresh in the minds of the house. The committee, therefore, believe that not only much time of the house would be thereby saved, but that its final decisions upon the various and important subjects of its deliberations, would be more satisfactory and correct.

It may, perhaps, be said, that the subjects embraced in the proposed 19th and 20th rules, are already determined by parliamentary usage; but as these cases are of frequent occurrence, and often give rise to much discussion, it has been thought advisable to regulate them by express rules.

The proposed 34th, 35th, 36th and 37th rules, are also new. They have been suggested by experience, and prepared after much reflection upon their subject. They will, in practice, produce some change in the course of legislation in this house, but it is confidently believed would be attended with many results exceedingly important and useful. Our legislation originates mainly in petition. The usual course of proceeding under the existing system, is, first, the presentation of the petition. This, according to its subject matter, is referred either to a standing or select committee. This committee, if they decide in favor of the prayer of the petition, usually report by bill, which they prepare, and, on leave granted, bring into the house. Now, it will readily be admitted, that a committee may be perfectly competent, indeed the best qualified possible, to decide upon the merits of a subject referred to them, and yet not be so well qualified to give legal form and effect to their own decision. This is no disparagement to the committee. It arises necessarily from the manner in which the committee is composed. This committee often not only is not composed of members of the legal profession, but may not have even a single lawyer upon it. But the drawing of bills is strictly a business of the lawyer, and requires considerable professional learning and skill. Let us suppose a committee consisting wholly of lay members, to decide in favor of an application referred to them, and to set about preparing a bill to carry their decision into effect. Unacquainted with the actual law, and not knowing that a part of their subject is perhaps already fully provided for by the existing statutes, they know not how much of new enactment is necessary to accomplish their object. Hence, in preparing their bill, they cover the whole ground: the consequence of all which generally is, that the bill contains a great deal of unnecessary matter, and that matter exceedingly informal. The bill, thus prepared, is presented to the house, receives its first and second reading, and is referred to a committee of the whole house. In its order, it is taken up and considered in committee of the whole, where much time and discussion pass merely in settling the form and details of the bill. Now, under the operation of these proposed rules, this would be avoided. Composed as the committee on bills might, and undoubtedly would always be, every bill, when it first goes to the committee of the whole, would contain only the necessary matter, and that matter arranged in the best and most legal form possible. Each bill, therefore, being in its form and details as perfect as possible when first presented for consideration, the discussions thereon, in committee of the whole, would be thereby narrowed down to the simple principle of the bill—to the single question of its expediency or inexpediency. Your committee, therefore, do not think it too much to say, that at least one half of the time of the house, in committee of the whole, would be thereby saved. The attention, too, of the committee of the whole, being thus directed mainly to the principle of each bill, that principle would be more likely to receive a full discussion and correct decision.

It may perhaps be objected by some, even those who might otherwise be in favor of these rules, that the duties of the committee to be appointed under them, would be so arduous, that it would be difficult to find members who would be willing to serve upon the committee. The duties of this committee would undoubtedly be arduous; but much less so than may at first, perhaps, be imagined. Our legislation, although it embraces a great diversity of subjects, yet resolves itself generally into a few formulæ. These being well understood, it will be neither difficult nor laborious for a committee, composed principally of professional members of experience and ability, to examine and put in legal form all bills to be acted upon in this house during an ordinary session. Should it, however, contrary to expectation, be found that the duties of this committee are too arduous, and that it is necessary to relieve them; this can be readily done by adding to the members of the committee, and thereby dividing their labors. Thus, under the operation of the proposed rules, the legislation of this house would, in its various stages, more fully exercise the peculiar talents, and receive the best services of all its members. While the sound judgment and practical good sense of the lay members were exercised in deciding preliminary questions, the learning and professional skill of the law members would be employed in giving legal form and effect to those decisions; while the enlightened wisdom of all would be united in giving its final sanction to, and disposing definitively of, that legislation. Hence our statute book, instead of that mass of unnecessary and informal matter which has sometimes encumbered it, would present a body of law which would be easily understood by those upon whom it is to operate, and do credit to those who had framed it.

With these observations, the committee beg leave to submit the draft of rules and orders prepared by them, and which they respectfully recommend to the house for its adoption.

To the Honorable the Legislature of the State of New-York.

The undersigned, in behalf of the revisers of the statutes of this state, beg leave respectfully to report:

That by a resolution of the house of assembly of the 30th September 1828, the memorial of Felix Pascalis, M. D. and Samuel Osborn, M. D. in behalf of themselves and others, members of the Medical Society of the city and county of New-York, and of the State Medical Society, praying for the repeal of certain regulations contained in the First Part of the Revised Statutes, concerning the practice of physic and surgery, was referred to the revisers.

The undersigned have recently examined the said memorial. They find that it refers to a former petition, presented to the legislature in the winter of 1828; in which several of the provisions contained in the revised statute referred to, were complained of, as unconstitutional, unjust and oppressive, and their repeal prayed for: And that the said memorial is particularly intended as a reply to a remonstrance, which had been presented in answer to the original petition; in which remonstrance, the provisions in question were highly approved, and their continuance earnestly recommended. But as the remonstrance and original petition were not referred to the revisers, and as the reasons urged on both sides address themselves exclusively to the wisdom of the legislature, the undersigned deem it improper to express any opinion on the memorial referred to them. They regret that their engagements during the last meeting of the legislature, prevented them from reporting on this subject; but they trust the petitioners have sustained no injury by the delay.

All which is respectfully submitted,

B. F. BUTLER,
J. C. SPENCER.

That the object of the petitioner is, as treasurer of the county, authorised by the board of supervisors, to request the legislature to pass a law to loan to the county, from the school fund, the sum of fifteen hundred dollars, to aid them in perfecting their poor-house establishment. The committee have ascertained that there are funds in the treasury belonging to that department, which, by law, are to be invested in stocks, which, from the information of the comptroller, will only produce about four and a half per cent.; therefore, the advantage of a loan paying an interest of seven per cent., would be the most advantageous to the state. Under this impression, and not doubting but that the county officers will feel a pride in keeping their engagements, and paying the interest and principal punctually, the committee have prepared a bill, and directed their chairman to ask for leave to introduce the same.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Burt, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to loan money to the county of Erie;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Bailey, a member of the Assembly, duly elected in and for the county of Genesee, appeared in the assembly chamber.

Ordered, That Mr. White and Mr. Hascall be a committee to attend with Mr. Bailey before some proper officer, and see him duly qualified.

Mr. White, from the committee appointed to attend with Mr. Bailey before some proper officer, and see him duly qualified, reported, that they had attended with him before the Hon. Enos T. Throop, lieutenant-governor, and seen him duly qualified.

Ordered, That Mr. Bailey do take his seat.

Ordered, That Mr. Fillmore have leave of absence for 3 days, and Mr. Soper for 5 days.

C. Fuller.

Mr. Judd, from the select committee to which was referred the petition of Rebecca Albro, praying for an act to allow her to receive and hold certain legacies left her by her grandfather, independent of her husband, Wait Albro, reported:

That the petitioner is the wife of Wait Albro, of the town of Beekman in the county of Dutchess. That some time in the month of August last, the said Wait Albro sold the only cow and hog of which he was the owner, and took the money and went away, since which time he has not been heard of, and left his wife with seven children, without making any provision for their support and maintenance.

That some time in the winter of 1828, the mother of the petitioner died, leaving the petitioner heir to certain freehold estate, situated in the said county of Dutchess; and that during the past summer, the said freehold has been sold by virtue of an execution against the said Wait Albro. That some time during the past autumn, and since the absconding of the said Wait Albro, the grandfather of the said Rebecca died, leaving certain legacies to be paid to her by his executors in money.

In examining the petition of the said Rebecca, the committee have endeavoured to ascertain the probable consequences of granting, or refusing to grant its prayer. And in the discharge of this part of the subject, the committee are constrained to say, that they have satisfactory information that Wait Albro, the husband of the said Rebecca, has, by a long course of neglect and idleness, totally failed to provide for the necessities of his said wife and family; and therefore justly forfeited all right to the receipt and control of the said legacies, which have fallen to his said wife by the will of her said grandfather. And further, the committee have great reason to fear, that if the said legacies should be paid over to the said Wait Albro, that they would be wasted in idleness and dissipation, without being converted to the comfort or happiness of the said Rebecca, or to her children. The committee have therefore unanimously concurred in opinion, that the prayer of the petitioner ought to be granted. They have prepared a bill accordingly, and now ask leave to introduce the same.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Judd, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to allow Rebecca Albro, the wife of Wait Albro, of the town of Beekman in Dutchess county, to receive certain legacies left her by her grandfather;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

On motion of Mr. P. C. Fuller,

Resolved, That the comptroller be requested to submit to this house, a statement of the loans heretofore made by this state, to individuals, companies or incorporations, which now remain unpaid; specifying the time when made, the time when payable, and the amount due on each loan respectively.

Mr. White gave notice, that on some future day, he would ask leave to bring in a bill, relative to monies unexpended, in the hands of the overseers of the poor of certain towns in the county of Oneida.

Mr. Edgerton gave notice that he would, on some future day, ask leave to introduce a bill, authorising the public notaries and the commissioners of deeds in the city of New-York, to hold their offices until the revised statutes go into operation.

On motion of Mr. Noble,

Ordered, That the committee of the whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill entitled "An act further to extend the time for the payment of monies loaned by the commissioners of loans and loan officers, to citizens of this state;" and that the same be referred to a select committee, consisting of Mr. Noble, Mr. White and Mr. Eldridge.

A communication from the surveyor-general was read, in the words following, to wit:

The surveyor-general on the petition of Jonathan Alexander, referred to him by the assembly, respectfully reports:

That under the act, ch. 6, of 1823, the petitioner became entitled to the preemption of the west part of lot No. 8, of the West-Hill tract in New-Stockbridge, containing $92\frac{73}{100}$ acres, appraised, exclusive of improvements, at $6 per acre; and jointly with James Alexander, to lot No. 9, in the same tract, containing $102\frac{79}{100}$ acres, appraised at $6.50 per acre; but applications for the premises were not made within the time limited by law, and the commissioners of the land-office were by that circumstance precluded from making the grant. No disposal has since been made of the land. A petition of the same purport with the present, appears to have been presented to the legislature last year, and referred to the committee on grievances, whose report thereon is entered on the printed journal of the assembly at page 924. The committee were of opinion that the prayer of the petitioner ought to be granted, and obtained leave to bring in a bill accordingly.

Respectfully submitted,
SIMEON DE WITT, Surveyor-General.

January 13th, 1829.

Ordered, That the said report, together with the documents accompanying the same, be referred to a select committee, consisting of Mr. Savage, Mr. W. K. Fuller and Mr. Bacon.

A communication from the surveyor-general, was read, in the words following, to wit:

The surveyor-general, on the petition of Erastus Willard, referred to him by the honorable the assembly, respectfully reports:

That in a treaty with the Oneida Indians in 1824, at which a tract of land was purchased by the state, there was a stipulation, that the petitioner should remain in the enjoyment of about 60 acres of land, which had been leased to him by said Indians, until the first day of May, 1829, then to be surrendered to the state. In allotting the tract, the surveyor, Peleg Gifford, laid out a lot of about 120 acres, which he appraised at eight dollars per acre, designating the east half as comprehended by the petitioner's lease. The west half was, on the 25th May, 1825, put up for sale by auction, and purchased by Joseph L. Williams and Erastus Willard, for the consideration of $485. Under the peculiar circumstances which he has stated, the petitioner now prays for a grant of the premises at the appraised value above mentioned.

It appears that a similar petition was presented to the legislature in the session of last year, and referred to a select committee, whose report is entered on the journal of the assembly at page 951. The committee were of opinion that the prayer of the petitioner ought to be granted, and obtained leave to bring in a bill accordingly.

Respectfully submitted,
SIMEON DE WITT, Surveyor-General.

K. Fuller, Mr. Eldridge and Mr. Williams, severally to consider and report thereon.

The house then again resolved itself into a committee of the whole, on the bill, entitled "an act to confirm the appointment of certain commissioners to take the proof and acknowledgment of deeds, &c. in the county of Sullivan," and after some time spent thereon, Mr. Speaker resumed the chair, and Mr. Bradish, from the said committee, reported, that the committee had gone through the said bill, made sundry amendments thereto, altered the title to "an act to confirm the official acts of certain commissioners of deeds, &c. in the county of Sullivan," and agreed to the same; which he was directed to report to the house, and he read the report in his place, and delivered the same in at the table, where it was again read, and ordered to be laid upon the table.

Mr. Johnson, from the select committee to which was referred the engrossed bill from the senate, entitled "An act for the relief of the widow and children of Justus Spertzell," reported, that they have examined the said bill, and see no reason why the same should not be passed into a law.

Ordered, That the bill be engrossed.

A communication from the comptroller was read, in the words following, to wit:

The comptroller, to whom was referred by the honorable the assembly, the petition of the treasurer of the county of Erie, for a loan from the treasury of the state, the report of the select committee on the said petition, and bill accompanying the same, reported:

That the statute books of this state exhibit many instances of loans to counties for specific purposes, and he believes these loans are a secure investment, because the debt is a charge upon the county to which the loan is made; and the law authorising it, usually, if not always, contains a provision, as does the one referred, making it the duty of the supervisors of such counties to provide for the payment not only of the interest, but of the principal, when it shall become due according to the terms of the loan.

It is proposed to make the loan asked for from the capital of the common school fund. By existing legal provisions, the capital of this fund can only be invested in public stocks. During the last year, more than one hundred thousand dollars of the capital of this fund have been invested in stock, and the most advantageous terms have been such, that the income from this investment will not much, if any, exceed $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. There is now in the treasury $70,446.24, of the capital of the common school fund, ready to be invested when an opportunity shall occur of doing it advantageously; and it is probable that no investment in stock (the only way in which it can be invested according to the present law) can be made that will promise an income of full five per cent. Whether, under these circumstances, it is expedient to authorise the loan asked for by the petition referred to the comptroller, is a question for the legislature to determine.

All which is respectfully submitted.

W. L. MARCY, Comptroller.

COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
Albany, 14*th Jan.* 1829.

Ordered, That the said report and bill upon the subject to which it relates, together with the accompanying documents, be committed to a committee of the whole house.

A communication from the comptroller was read, in the words following, to wit:

The receipts into the treasury, for the year ending 30th November last, (see Statement D.) have been,		$1,938,006 19
Balance in the treasury on the 1st December, 1827,		163,043 16
Aggregate,		2,101,049 35
During the same period, there has been paid out of the treasury, as follows, viz:
Amount of warrants outstanding, 30th Nov. 1827,	716 59
Amount of warrants drawn, during the year, (see Statement E.)	1,988,951 89
	1,989,668 48
Less am't. of warrants outstanding 30 Nov. 1828,	864 00
		1,988,804 48
Leaving a balance in the treasury, on the 30th Nov. 1828, applicable to the ordinary expenses of government, of		$112,244 87

But there is due from the General Fund, to several specific funds, as follows, viz:

To the common school fund, viz.	Capital,	$70,446 24
	Revenue,	100,000 00
			$170,446 24

From which deduct the balance in the treasury, 30th Nov. 1828, as above,			112,244 87
Leaving a deficit of			$68,837 20

REMARKS.

In the last Annual Report which the Comptroller had the honor to submit to the legislature, he estimated that the ordinary expenses of the government for the last year, would exceed the revenue applicable to that purpose, about $175,000. There was then a surplus in the treasury of $115,028 45, to meet that amount of the estimated deficit; and the remainder, it was suggested, could be satisfied only "by a temporary loan, by a sale of some of the stock belonging to the general fund, by collecting a part of the principal of the debts of that fund, or by a resort to taxation." By an "Act to provide for the deficiency that may exist in the general fund to meet the charges upon it," the Comptroller was directed to sell to the commissioners of the canal fund, so much of the stock belonging to the general fund, as should enable the treasury to satisfy the claims upon it. Under this authority, $20,000 of this stock has been sold, for which there was received $21,000.

Although at the close of the last fiscal year, there was $112,244 87 in the treasury, yet the claims of the common school fund and the literature fund upon it, amount to $181,082 07. Under the law above mentioned, a further sale must soon be made of such portion of the stock belonging to the general fund, as will supply a deficit of $68,837 20.

The ordinary expenses of the government for the current year, are estimated at.....	$291,500 00
The income applicable to the payment of these expenses, is estimated, for the same year, at	172,550 00
Estimated deficiency for the present year,.....	$118,950 00

On the subject of supplying this deficiency, the Comptroller has no other views to present to the legislature, than those which are contained in the concluding paragraph of the Remarks in his last Annual Report.

Of the capital of the common school fund which was in the treasury on the 30th November, 1827, and has been received into it since, $107,766 63 has been invested pursuant to the directions of the 4th section of Title 4, Chap. 9 of the First Part of the Revised Statutes, by the purchase of $100,000 of the stock issued to the Delaware and Hudson canal company; and there is now in the treasury, $70,446 24 of the capital, which will be invested whenever a proper opportunity shall occur for that purpose.

All which is respectfully submitted.

W. L. MARCY, Comptroller.

Resolved, That Charles E. Dudley, of the city and county of Albany, be, and he is hereby nominated on the part of this house, a senator to represent this state in the Senate of the Congress of the United States, in the place of the Hon. Martin Van Buren, resigned.

A copy of a resolution of the Senate, delivered by their clerk, was read, in the words following, to wit:

Resolved, That the Senate will immediately meet the Assembly in the Assembly chamber, to compare their nominations for senator to represent this state in the Senate of the United States.

Thereupon,

Ordered, That the clerk deliver a copy of the preceding resolution of concurrence to the Senate.

The Senate accordingly attended in the Assembly chamber; and having withdrawn, Mr. Speaker informed the house, that on comparing the nominations of the Senate and Assembly, they were found to agree in the name of Charles E. Dudley, of the city of Albany.

Thereupon,

On motion of Mr. Jenkins,

Resolved, That Charles E. Dudley, of the city and county of Albany, be, and he is hereby appointed a senator to represent this state in the Senate of the Congress of the United States, in the place of the Hon. Martin Van Buren, resigned.

A communication from the revisers of the statute laws of this state, was read, in the words following, to wit:

To the Honorable the Legislature of the State of New-York.

The undersigned, in behalf of the revisers of the statutes of this state, beg leave respectfully to report:

That by a resolution of the House of Assembly of the 17th of March 1828, the petition of the mayor, aldermen and commonalty of the city of Hudson, relating to a division and consolidation of the laws concerning that city, together with the draft of a bill consolidating and amending those laws, was referred to the revisers. Their engagements during the meetings of the Legislature during the past year, prevented the revisers from examining the said petition and bill, in time to report thereon previous to the adjournment of the last meeting.

The undersigned have now examined the said bill. They find many alterations of the existing laws, the principal object of which appears to be to supply omissions in those laws, and to enlarge the powers of the common council; but as they presume the reference to them was not made for the purpose of procuring their opinion upon these alterations, and as indeed they are incompetent to judge of those which are local and peculiar, they abstain from any observations concerning them.

The language of the bill is correct, and little if any improvement can be made in its phraseology or arrangement. Some of the sections are unnecessary, as they are already included in the general laws comprised in the Revised Statutes; and others will require amendment, to conform them to provisions contained in those statutes. The alterations and amendments which appear to be necessary, are indicated in the paper hereunto annexed.

All which is respectfully submitted,

B. F. BUTLER,
J. C. SPENCER.

January 8, 1829.

AMENDMENTS.

Sec. 1. After the word "beginning" in the third line, strike out the words "at the channel of the Hudson river," and insert "at the westerly bounds of the county of Columbia."

Same section, 12th line, after "manor," strike out all to the word "aforesaid," 17th line, and insert "and the same continued to the westerly bounds of the said county, and then along the said westerly bounds to the place of beginning."

[This is conformable to the description of the city of Hudson contained in the Revised Statutes, in which the west bounds of the city are extended to the westerly bounds of the county of Columbia. Under the laws now in force, there is a portion of the county of Columbia which is not included in any of the subdivisions of that county.]

§ 14. Strike out all after the word "money" in the 10th line, to the word "and" in the 13th line inclusive, and insert the following, "not less than five nor more than thirty dollars, as the said common council shall think proper; and they".

Same section. After "city," 16th line, add the following clause: "and every person licensed to keep an inn or tavern, shall be required to execute the like bond, with the like surety, as may from time to time be required by the laws of this state, relative to excise and the regulation of inns and taverns, and shall be subject to all the provisions of law concerning the keepers of inns and taverns in the several towns of this state."

[These amendments are proposed to render the section more explicit, and to remove a doubt in regard to the liability of the keepers of inns and taverns to give security, &c.]

§ 15, line 30. Strike out from the word "act" inclusive, to the words "1801" inclusive, in the 32d line, and insert the words "last preceding section."

§ 16, 5th line. Strike out from the word "aforesaid" inclusive, to the word "taverns" in the 7th line inclusive, and insert "laws of this state concerning excise and the regulation of inns and taverns."

[The amendments proposed to the 15th, 16th and 23d sections, are merely verbal. The act to which the sections refer by their titles, have been revised, and after the 1st of January 1830, will not be known by the titles of the original acts. The references above suggested, will not only conform to the revised statute when it takes effect, but in the mean time will include the existing laws.]

§ 27. Strike out the whole section. It is a new provision, and is moreover repugnant to the revised statute concerning the relief of the poor. Part 1, ch. 20, tit. 1.

§ 37. Strike out the whole section. It is contained in the Revised Statutes, Part 3, ch. 1, tit. 6, § 7.

§ 39, line 3. Strike out the words "act to regulate highways," and insert "statutes of this state concerning highways."

§ 45. Strike out the whole section, and insert the following in lieu thereof:

"§ 45. It shall be the duty of the sealer of weights and measures for the county of Columbia, to furnish from time to time to the sealer of weights and measures to be appointed for said city by the common council thereof, copies of such original standards as may be transmitted to the said county sealer for distribution; and the said city sealer shall possess the like powers, and be subject to the like duties and obligations, as the sealers of the several towns in this state."

[This section will be more consistent with the present general law, and with the revised statute on this subject, than the section in the draft.]

§ 52. Strike out all after the word "city" in the third line, and insert the following, "in criminal cases, as are given by law to the justices of the peace of the several towns of this state."

Ordered, That the said communication, together with the documents accompanying the same, be referred to the committee on the incorporation of cities and villages.

A communication from the canal commissioners, was read, in the words following, to wit:

The canal commissioners, to whom was referred by the Hon. the Assembly, the petition of the commissioners of highways of the town of Fayette, report:

The Seneca lock navigation company, for the purpose of forming a navigable communication between the Seneca lake and its outlet, made a cut through a neck of land at the foot of the lake, over which they erected two bridges for the accommodation of two public roads, which intersect on the north side of this cut; one of which bridges failed in 1827, and the other the last season.

Application was made to rebuild these bridges at the expense of the state; alleging, that inasmuch as the state had purchased the interest of the company to all the works connected with their navigation, they were under obligations to maintain these bridges.

It was supposed that the canal commissioners had no authority to expend the public money for any object separate from that of constructing the Cayuga and Seneca canal; and as the continuance of this act is not necessary for any purposes of the canal, they declined rebuilding these bridges.

It may, however, be proper to remark, that with reference to the health of the inhabitants at the head of the lake, and the interest of the proprietors of lands affected by a rise of water in the lake, it would be important to preserve this channel, as the natural outlet of the lake is obstructed by dams and other erections.

WILLIAM C. BOUCK,
In behalf of the Canal Commissioners.

January 15, 1829.

Ordered, That the said report, together with the documents accompanying the same, be referred to the committee on the establishment and improvement of roads and bridges, and the incorporation of turnpike companies.

The house then resolved itself into a committee of the whole, on the engrossed bill from the Senate, entitled "An act to increase the number of trustees of the Methodist episcopal church in the city of New-York;" and after some time spent thereon, Mr. Speaker resumed the chair, and Mr. Johnson, from the said committee, reported, that the committee had gone through the said bill, and agreed to the same without amendment; which he was directed to report to the house, and he read the report in his place, and delivered the same in at the table, where it was again read and agreed to by the house, and the bill ordered to a third reading.

The house then resolved itself into a committee of the whole, on the bill entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act to divide the town of Middleburgh in the county of Schoharie,' passed April 15th, 1828;" and after some time spent thereon, Mr. Speaker resumed the chair, and Mr. Noble, from the said committee, reported, that the committee had gone through the said bill, and agreed to the same without amendment; which he was directed to report to the house, and he read the report in his place, and delivered the same in at the table, where it was again read, and agreed to by the house.

Ordered, That the bill be engrossed.

And then the House adjourned until eleven o'clock to-morrow morning.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 16, 1829.

The House met pursuant to adjournment.

The petition of sundry inhabitants of the town of Pompey in the county of Onondaga, praying for the passage of an act to alter the time of holding the annual town-meetings in said town, was read, and referred to a select committee, consisting of Mr. J. Hall, Mr. Jenkins and Mr. L. Smith.

The petition of sundry inhabitants of the counties of Erie and Cattaraugus, praying for the construction of a canal from Buffalo creek to the Allegany river, through the valley of the Conewango, was read, and referred to the committee on canals and internal improvements.

The petition of the clerks employed in the Albany post-office, praying to be exempted from the performance of military duty, was read, and referred to the committee on the militia and the public defence.

The petition of William Williams, receiver of the Bank of Niagara, praying legislative relief in relation to a certain debt due the state, and certain property held by the state as security for the payment of the same, was read, and referred to the comptroller.

The petition of Frances Wilkinson, John Wilkinson and Dorothy Wilkinson, aliens, praying for the passage of a law to release to them certain lands purchased by their father, and to enable them to purchase, take, hold, and convey real estate within this state, was read, and referred to a select committee, consisting of Mr. Paige, Mr. Skinner and Mr. Burt.

The petition of sundry inhabitants of the county of Sullivan, praying for the passage of a law to authorise the removal of sundry papers, records and documents, as set forth in the petition from the county of Ulster, to the county of Sullivan, was read, and referred to the committee on the judiciary.

The petition of the president, directors and company of the Mechanics' Bank in the city of New-York, praying for a renewal of their charter, was read, and referred to the committee on the incorporation and alteration of the charters of banking and insurance companies.

The petition of sundry inhabitants of the south part of the county of Washington, praying for the passage of an act authorising the construction of a side-cut from the Champlain canal to the Hudson river, between Saratoga and Still-water falls, was read, and referred to the committee on canals and internal improvements.

The petition of Samuel T. Shephard and others, of the towns of Fort-Edward and Greenwich, in the county of Washington, praying remuneration for damages occasioned by the construction of the Champlain canal, was read, and referred to the canal board.

Mr. Burt, from the committee on the establishment and improvement of roads and bridges, and the incorporation of turnpike companies, to which was referred the petition of sundry inhabitants of the town of Plainfield in the county of Otsego, praying for the repeal of a law passed April 19th, 1828, appointing commissioners to lay out a certain public highway in said town, reported:

That the committee have given the subject that attention and inquiry which they believed was necessary, to present the merits of the application fairly before the house. Among other things of which they complain, is that the bill was introduced on notice, and passed before a remonstrance could be presented. The committee have not, however, been able to discover much weight in this argument; because no one seems to deny but that the road, when constructed, will be found useful. The most annoying part of their feelings appear to be aimed at the damage awarded by the assessors, to the proprietors of the land through which the road was laid. From the assessment, it appears an appeal was brought by the authorities of the town, before the board of supervisors of said county, for their consideration; in which case a partial relief was granted, and the matter adjusted as a majority of that board thought proper. In which case, the committee believe that board much better qualified to judge of the merits of the controversy, than those to whose consideration the subject has been committed.

One other consideration the committee beg leave to allude to. Since the passage of the law complained of, the then owner of the land has sold; and the purchaser, knowing the highway was laid out at the time of making it, would not his right be infringed upon if the law was to be repealed?

The subject does, as you will have perceived, partake of the feelings of the complainants most on account of the high assessment; in which case, the committee do not think come within their duty, acting as a committee to whom the subject has been referred. They have therefore directed their chairman to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That the petitioners have leave to withdraw their petition.

Ordered, That the said report and resolution be laid upon the table.

Mr. Armstrong, from the committee on the erection and division of towns and counties, to which was referred the petition of sundry inhabitants of the town of Franklinville in the county of Cattaraugus, praying for a division of that town, asked for leave to report by bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Armstrong, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to divide the town of Franklinville, in the county of Cattaraugus;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Savage, from the select committee to which was referred the petition of Jonathan Alexander, reported:

That the petitioner is a resident on lands ceded to the people of this state by the Stockbridge Indians, and comes within the provision of the second section of the act of March 12th, 1823, which provides for persons having made improvements on any of said lands.

It appears from the certificate of the surveyor-general, that the petitioner became entitled to the pre-emption of the west part of lot number 8 of the West-hill tract in New-Stockbridge, containing $92\frac{73}{100}$ acres; and, jointly with one James Alexander, to lot number 9 in the same tract. But that neither the petitioner, nor the said James Alexander, complied with the provisions of the act referred to.

It also appears from a deed of James Alexander to the petitioner, that James Alexander conveyed to the petitioner all of the interest which he had in lot number 9 above mentioned. The lands are still unsold, and the petitioner applies for the same, on the terms which are contained in the several sections of the said act.

As the state has suffered no loss by the delay, and no sale has been effected, the committee are of opinion that the prayer of the petitioner ought to be granted, and have prepared a bill accordingly.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Savage, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act for the disposal of lands ceded to the people of this state,' passed March 12th, 1823;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Savage, from the select committee to which was referred the petition of Erastus Willard, reported:

That in the year 1824, the chiefs of the Oneida Indians, with the consent of their attorney, leased to Erastus Willard, for the term of five years, sixty acres of land, being a part of lot number twenty-five in the Oneida reservation; and that the said Erastus Willard has been to great expense in improving said land previous to the purchase by the state, with the understanding that he could have a pre-emptive right to purchase the same; and that the said Erastus did not occupy the said land, but about two years previous to the purchase of the same; and from the statement of the surveyor-general upon the subject, which is herewith presented, the said Erastus' right to have the land at the appraisal made by Peleg Gifford, which he is willing to take.

And as the committee can see no loss resulting to the state by such sale, they think the prayer of the petitioner ought to be granted, and have prepared a bill for that purpose, which they now ask leave to introduce.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Savage, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act authorising the commissioners of the land-office to sell a certain lot of land;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Gross, from the select committee to which was referred the petition of Henry H. Ross and Charles M'Neil, reported:

The petitioners state that they are engaged in building a steam-boat on Lake Champlain, for conveying freight, passengers, &c. and towing boats and rafts: That the business requires the employment of a larger capital than can be furnished by themselves; and that the concerns of many proprietors cannot be managed with safety, except by an incorporation: That there are already two incorporated steam-boat companies on that lake, both located in Vermont; and that an act of incorporation is necessary to enable them to carry on business with success.

The committee believe the facts stated, on account of the respectability of the petitioners, and because the facts are matters of public notoriety; and they are of opinion that the prayer of the petitioners is reasonable, and ought to be granted.

They have therefore directed their chairman to prepare a bill, and ask leave to introduce the same.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Gross, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to incorporate the Essex steam navigation company;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Fowler, from the select committee to which was referred the petition of the judges of the court of common pleas, and members of the bar of the county of Orange, praying for an extension of the terms of the said court, reported:

That it appears satisfactorily to the committee, that the county courts of the said county are unable to perform all of the business brought before them at the respective terms thereof, as now established by law; and the committee therefore deem the prayer of the petitioners reasonable, and have directed their chairman to ask leave to bring in a bill accordingly.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Fowler, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to extend the terms of the county courts in and for the county of Orange;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Van Wyck, from the select committee to which was referred the petition of the supervisors of the county of Dutchess, praying for the passage of a law to alter the time of their annual meeting, reported:

That at a meeting of the board of supervisors of the county of Dutchess, held at the court-house in the village of Poughkeepsie in said county, on the 15th of December 1828, it was unanimously resolved, that application be made to the honorable the legislature, for an act changing the time of holding the annual meeting of said board of supervisors, from the second Tuesday in November, to the first Monday in October in each and every year; and that the chairman and clerk be directed to present a petition for such purpose.

The committee would state, that previous to the session of 1825, the time of holding the annual meeting of the supervisors of Dutchess, was on the first Monday in October, as is now sought to be obtained: That a change being desired by several counties, it was thought best by the delegation from Dutchess to include said county, without instruction, as is believed, from their constituents.

The committee having examined the reasons for the proposed change set forth in the petition, although others might be assigned, believe them to be conclusive, and are unanimously of opinion that the prayer of the petitioners ought to be granted.

The committee have prepared a bill accordingly, and ask leave to introduce the same.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Van Wyck, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to alter the time of annual meeting of the board of supervisors in the county of Dutchess;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Paige gave notice that he would, on some future day, ask leave to introduce a bill relative to district attornies, and also a bill relative to justices of the peace of the city of Schenectady.

On motion of Mr. T. L. Smith,

Resolved, That the committee to whom is referred that portion of the governor's message relating to salaries, be, and they are hereby instructed to examine the expediency of reducing the official compensation of the register for the city and county of New-York, and making it in future a salary office; and that said committee report thereon.

Mr. W. Hall, from the committee on engrossed bills, reported, that they have examined the engrossed bill entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act to divide the town of Middleburgh in the county of Schoharie,' passed April 15th, 1828;" and that the same is correctly engrossed.

The said engrossed bill, entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act to divide the town of Middleburgh in the county of Schoharie,' passed April 15th, 1828," was read the third time.

Resolved, That the bill do pass.

Ordered, That the clerk deliver the said bill to the Senate, and request their concurrence in the same.

A message from the Senate, delivered by their clerk, with the bill therein mentioned, was read, informing that they have passed the bill entitled "An act relative to deeds and mortgages executed, or to be executed by the Public School society of New-York;" in which bill they request the concurrence of this house.

The said bill was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and referred to a select committee, consisting of Mr. T. L. Smith, Mr. J. Van Beuren and Mr. Al Burtis, to consider and report thereon.

A copy of a resolution of the Senate, delivered by their clerk, was read, in in the words following, to wit:

Resolved, (if the Assembly concur,) That the following be the "Joint Rules of the Senate and Assembly:"

1. Each house shall transmit to the other, all papers on which any bill or resolution shall be founded.

2. When a bill or resolution which shall have passed in one house, is rejected in the other, notice thereof shall be given to the house in which the same may have passed.

3. Messages from one house to the other, shall be communicated by the respective clerks of each house, unless the house transmitting the message shall especially direct otherwise.

4. It shall be in the power of either house to amend any amendment made by the other to any bill or resolution.

5. In every case of a difference between the two houses upon any subject of legislation, either house may request a conference, and appoint a committee for that purpose, and the other shall also appoint a committee to confer. The committees shall meet at such hour and place as shall be agreed upon by their chairman, and state to each other, verbally or in writing, as either shall choose, the reasons of their respective houses, and confer freely thereon. And they shall be authorised to report to their respective houses, such modifications or amendments as they may think advisable.

6. It shall be in order for either house to recede from any subject matter of difference subsisting between the two houses at any time previous to conference, whether the papers on which such difference has arisen are before the house receding, formally or informally; and that a majority shall govern, except in those cases where two-thirds are required by the constitution. And the question having been put and lost, shall not be again put on the same day; and the reconsideration thereof shall in other respects be regulated by the rules of the respective houses.

7. After each house shall have adhered to their disagreement, the bill which is the subject of difference shall be deemed lost, and shall not be again revived during the same session in either house.

8. The same bill shall not create, renew, or continue more than one incorporation, nor contain any provisions in relation to the altering of more than one act of incorporation; nor shall the same bill appropriate the public money or property to more than one local or private purpose. And bills appropriating money for the payment of the officers of government, shall be confined to that purpose exclusively.

9. Whenever there shall be a ballot for officers by the two houses, the result shall be certified by the President of the Senate and Speaker of the Assembly, and shall be reported by the presiding officer of each house to their respective houses, and be entered on the journals of each, and shall be communicated to the Governor by the clerks of the two houses.

10. No bill which shall have passed one House, shall be sent for concurrence to the other, on either of the two last days of the session.

Thereupon,

Resolved, That this house do concur with the Senate in their said resolution.

Ordered, That the clerk deliver a copy of the preceding resolution of concurrence to the Senate.

A communication from A. Keyser, treasurer of the state, was read, in the words following, to wit:

A. KEYSER, Treasurer.

In pursuance of title four of chapter eight of the Revised Statutes, the undersigned, a committee appointed for that purpose by concurrent resolution of both houses of the legislature, do certify, that we have examined the accounts and vouchers relating to the monies received into, and paid out of the treasury, for the year commencing on the first day of December 1827, and ending on the last day of November 1828, both days inclusive; and that we find by the accounts of the treasurer, and by the books and certificate of the comptroller, that during that period, the sum of one million nine hundred thirty-eight thousand and six dollars and nineteen cents, has been received by the treasurer; and that the balance in the treasury on the said first day of December, was one hundred and sixty-three thousand forty-three dollars and sixteen cents, as appears by the same documents; which sums together amount to two million one hundred and one thousand forty-nine dollars and thirty-five cents: That the payments out of the treasury during the same time, as appears by the warrants and vouchers presented to us, all of which we have examined, amount to one million nine hundred eighty-eight thousand eight hundred and four dollars and forty-eight cents; leaving a balance in the treasury on the said thirtieth day of November last, of one hundred and twelve thousand two hundred and forty-four dollars and eighty-seven cents.

And we further certify, that we have examined the treasurer's bank book with the Commercial Bank in the city of Albany; by which it appears, that on the day last mentioned, there was a balance of public monies standing to the credit of the said treasurer in said bank, of one hundred thousand three hundred and thirty-nine dollars and seventy-one cents: That we have also examined the statements signed by the cashiers of the Mechanics' and Farmers' Bank of Albany, and the Manhattan Company in the city of New-York, respectively; by which it appears, that on the same day, there was of public monies standing to the credit of the treasurer, in the Mechanics' and Farmers' Bank, nineteen thousand six hundred and twenty-eight dollars and fifty-nine cents, and in the Manhattan Company, one thousand three hundred and fifty-four dollars and sixty-eight cents; which balances in the aggregate amount to one hundred and twenty-one thousand three hundred and twenty-two dollars and ninety-eight cents, and which exceed the balance required nine thousand and seventy-eight dollars and eleven cents, arising, as appears by the certificate of the comptroller, in the following manner: First, the amount of nine thousand and forty-five dollars and forty-three cents, from checks drawn by the treasurer, and unpaid on the day aforesaid; second, the amount of thirty-two dollars and sixty-eight cents, from deposits in the Manhattan Bank, uncertified to the treasurer, but appearing in the account of said bank.

And we do further certify, that we have compared the warrants drawn by the comptroller upon the treasury during the time aforesaid, with the several laws under which they were drawn; and find them all to have been properly drawn, with the exceptions mentioned in our report to the legislature of this date.

That on the part of the applicants, it is stated that they are desirous of constructing a turnpike road, from some point on the Western turnpike, to the village of Canajoharie. From the statements set forth in the petition, corroborated by persons who wish to be interested in said road, and have assured the committee that it would be very useful to the farmers and merchants, to transport their produce and merchandize to and from the Erie canal; it is also further represented that this is the most eligible route for the construction of such road, as to the wants, accommodations, and wishes of the people residing in that neighbourhood. The length of the road will be, if constructed as proposed, about ten miles: its route will be, the most of the way, along the valley of creeks; and the expense attending its construction will be small, in comparison with the immense advantages that will accrue to persons residing in that section of the country. At present, they are under the necessity of transporting their property to the city of Albany by land, and receive their supplies from the same source, rather than attempt the precarious route to the canal. It is represented to the committee, if the road be constructed, it will add business to the Erie canal. The committee are of opinion, that it is proper to grant facilities to those persons who will invest their funds in promoting industry, convenience and wealth. They have prepared a bill accordingly, and directed their chairman to ask for leave to introduce the same.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Ordered, That the said bill and amendment be committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Paige, from the select committee to which was referred the petition of Francis Wilkinson, John Wilkinson and Dorothy Wilkinson, of the town of Duanesburgh in the county of Schenectady, reported:

That John Wilkinson, the father of the petitioners, being a resident of this state in the year 1823, obtained permission by act of the legislature to hold real estate in this state. That he made application to become naturalized, but died before the expiration of the time required by law for him to obtain his certificate of naturalization. That during his life, he purchased lands in this state. That since the time of said purchase, he has died intestate, leaving the petitioners his only surviving children. That the petitioners are aliens, have resided long, and intend to continue residents in the United States. That the petitioners also intend to take the necessary steps to become naturalized citizens of the United States.

The committee, from the foregoing facts, are satisfied that the prayer of the petitioners is reasonable, and therefore ask leave to introduce a bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Paige, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Francis Wilkinson and others;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Dean, from the committee on Indian affairs, to which was referred the petition of the First Christian party of the Oneida Indians, together with that part of the same nation called the Orchard party, reported:

That upon a deliberate investigation of the petition, with what other information the committee could procure on the subject, it appears that the Oneida nation originally owned an extensive region, situated within this state, consisting of a rich and productive soil, and comprising every natural advantage necessary for the encouragement of agricultural and manufacturing pursuits. That by the first treaty which the chiefs of that nation made with the state of New-York, in the year 1788, they ceded all the lands which they then owned, to this state; reserving only a right to possess a certain portion of it during their own pleasure. This reservation, being at first of some thirty or forty miles extent, has been reduced, by subsequent contracts, to a very limited area, so that the whole nation does not at present possess more than eight or nine thousand acres of land.

This tribe, it appears, is now divided into three parties, and distinguished by the names of the first and second Christian parties, together with the Orchard party. The first and last of these denominations, are the subjects of the present application, and unite in supplicating that the governor be directed by legislative enactment, to purchase their lands at an equitable price, and pay the amount whenever they shall so dispose of the same to the state of New-York.

One reason assigned by the chiefs of the first Christian party, for asking the full value of their land, is, that they have purchased a large tract at Green Bay, west of Lake Michigan. They intend to move to that place as soon as practicable: Nearly one hundred of said party design to migrate the ensuing summer. Without the full value of their lands, they would not be able to arrive at a region so remote from their present residence, nor even prepare themselves with the apparel necessary for such a journey.

They also state to the committee, that their present abode is surrounded by tippling houses, which contribute largely to sap the morals of the tribe, and annihilate their acquired taste for education and industry. Although laws have been enacted to prevent the sale of spirituous liquors to them by the citizens of this state, yet from a love of gain on the one hand, and a thirst for ardent spirits on the other, it is found absolutely impracticable to check this lamentable and growing evil in their nation. Their chiefs, and those of them who are not addicted to the excessive use of ardent spirits, are extremely anxious that the tribe should speedily move to Green Bay, where, at a distance from places whence that fascinating poison can be obtained, their nation may not only be saved from extinction, but regain their native vigor, and be enabled to procure for themselves and their progeny a comfortable subsistence.

From the best information the committee could procure, it appears that a part of the Oneida nation, and almost the whole of the Stockbridge tribe, have gone to Green Bay. Those have turned their attention to agricultural pursuits with a comparatively high degree of avidity. This circumstance, in the humble opinion of the committee, amounts at least to a presumptive proof of the substantial advantages which would result to that people from their entire migration.

The committee are not in possession of any documents, by which to ascertain with accuracy, the precise extent of territory transferred by the Oneida nation to this state. It appears, however, that their lands were sold for a mere trifle, and always at a nominal value. These sales, the committee believe, must have been highly advantageous to the state, as will be seen by referring to Mr. Denniston's communication on that subject.

From the researches the committee have been able to make, it evidently appears that the existence of the different parties above mentioned, has been recognized by this state in the following treaties, made with each of them respectively: The negotiations of 1817 and 1826, were made with the second Christian party alone; that in 1824, was made with the first Christian party; and the compact of 1827, was exclusively with the Orchard party. Each party has its separate parcel of land, distinguished by metes and boundaries, and is therefore capable of asking relief, and ratifying its own contracts.

It further appears, that by a legislative act of this state, bearing date the 17th of March, 1826, the Stockbridge Indians were allowed the full value of their lands. The native inference presented to the committee from this circumstance, is, that if the Stockbridge tribe received the full value of the lands which became theirs by the gratuitous generosity of the Oneida nation, how much rather should the latter receive a fair equivalent for that of which they were the original owners, and which they now propose the disposal of to this state?

As serious disputes have frequently arisen among the three forementioned parties, respecting the division of their existing annuity from this state, the committee, with deference, ask leave to suggest the propriety of appointing, by legislative enactment, three proper persons, to make a final division among the three parties, and settle the same according to equity.

Finally: Considering the legislature of this state as the voluntary guardian of the remaining remnant of that once renowned and powerful nation, which, with untiring ardor faced the tyrant foe throughout the protracted struggles of our blood-bought revolution: Considering, also, the ample sources of wealth which a transfer of their lands has opened to this state, and which a further transfer would continue to augment, together with the justness of their claims, and the destitute circumstances of their situation, the committee believe that gratitude for the past, magnanimity for the present, and sound policy for the future, combine with all the better feelings of humanity and the virtues of christianity, to regard the final supplications of that declining race. They therefore are unanimously of opinion, that the prayer of the petitioners ought to be granted; and for that purpose have prepared a bill, and directed their chairman to ask leave to introduce the same.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Dean, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act relating to the purchase of lands from the First Christian and Orchard parties of the Oneida Indians;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Ordered, That the usual number of copies of the said bill and report be printed for the use of the legislature.

Mr. Falley, from the select committee to which was referred the petition of the trustees of the Rensselaer Oswego academy, praying for certain legislative relief as set forth in their petition, reported:

That the committee have had the same under consideration. That on the 18th of April 1827, the taxable inhabitants of school district number five in the town of Mexico in the county of Oswego, did individually execute to the trustees of the said academy, a writing releasing the land and building owned and occupied by said school district, in the words following, to wit:

"We the subscribers, inhabitants of school district number five in the town of Mexico, do hereby agree to release unto the trustees of the Rensselaer Oswego academy and their successors, all our right, title, and interest in the brick school-house in said district, and the land belonging to the same; provided, the academy shall be permanently located on the said land. Dated at Mexico, April 18th, 1827."

That by an act of the legislature of this state, passed March 28th, 1828, the Rensselaer Oswego academy is permanently located upon the said land; and inasmuch as it appears doubtful whether the aforesaid conveyance is valid in law, the petitioners request that a law may be passed, authorising the trustees of said school district number five, to convey, by a sufficient deed, the said house and land, to the trustees of the said Rensselaer Oswego academy; which request the committee consider just and reasonable, and they have directed their chairman to ask leave to introduce a bill for that purpose.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Falley, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act for the relief of the trustees of the Rensselaer Oswego academy;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Dayton gave notice, that on some future day, he would ask leave to introduce a bill to shorten the term for which the firemen of the city of New-York are required to serve, in order to procure a subsequent exemption from jury and militia duty.

The house then proceeded to the consideration of the report of the committee of the whole, on the bill entitled "An act to incorporate the Harlaem literary and scientific academy;" the said report being, that the committee had gone through the said bill, and agreed to the same without amendment.

That the town of Fayette in said county, has been subjected to the expense of rebuilding a bridge over the Seneca canal. This canal was formerly the property of a private company; and, of course, that company became liable to erect and maintain the necessary bridges over that canal. Since which, however, the state has considered this lateral canal of so much importance, as to purchase the whole rights and privileges granted to the stockholders in their charter. The question now arises, whether the state, in purchasing the interest of this company, did not make themselves liable to all the provisions contained in the general laws regulating inland navigation companies, which laws make it imperative upon said corporation. The committee are of opinion that the state did incur that obligation; and upon an examination of the revised laws of 1802, 2d volume, page 304, will be found the law which governs their opinion. Under this view of the application, the committee have prepared a bill, directing the canal commissioner who has charge of the Seneca canal, to pay such sum as will pay the expense of such bridge, not exceeding two hundred dollars; which they now ask leave to introduce.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

A communication from the canal commissioners, was read, in the words following, to wit:

The canal commissioners, to whom was referred by the Hon. the Assembly, the petition of Loyd Williams, report:

That the petitioner represents that he is the owner of twenty-five acres of timber land in the town of Camillus, which is injured by the leakage of the Erie canal, and requires much expense in ditching; and that on application to the canal commissioners, they refused to grant him relief.

The petitioner applied to one of the canal commissioners to ditch and drain his land. This application was refused, on the ground that if the petitioner was injured by the construction of the canal on his land, he had his remedy by an application to the canal appraisers.

On the construction and first filling of the canal, the commissioners, in order to avoid unnecessary injury to individuals, and to save the state from the payment of damages, cut ditches to carry off the water which flowed out of the canal: but in all cases where the propriety of incurring this expense was doubtful, or where the claim appeared unreasonable, they have considered it their duty to refer the claimants to the appraisers, who have authority to award such damages as shall appear just and reasonable, in reference to benefits as well as injuries, arising from the acts of the canal commissioners.

It is now nearly ten years since the canal was constructed on the petitioner's land; and if he has been injured thereby, and has not obtained compensation, it is because he has not made application to the tribunal which the Legislature has constituted for the express purpose of granting relief in such cases.

In behalf of the Canal Commissioners,
HENRY SEYMOUR.

Mr. Johnson, from the committee on canals and internal improvements, to whom was referred the petition of the citizens of the counties of Oneida, Madison, Chenango and Broome, praying for the construction of a canal through the valley of the Chenango river to Cleveland's pond, thence to the Erie canal, reported:

That the committee, in considering the subject referred to them, and which has been several times before the legislature, have endeavoured to bestow upon it that attention which it deserves, and have examined the various reports that have heretofore been made on this subject, from an examination of which they have been much aided in their deliberations. The committee will barely refer to the various proceedings that have been had, relative to the construction of the proposed canal, before they proceed to the reasons which lead them to the results at which they arrive.

In the year 1814, the subject of connecting the waters of the Susquehannah with the Erie canal, was agitated; and in 1824 a petition was presented for the survey of the Chenango canal, and a bill was introduced but was not acted upon, for want of time. The report of the committee may be found in the journals of that year, page 1054.

In the session of 1825, a bill was introduced for the survey of a canal through the valley of the Chenango, to which was finally added sixteen other routes; and in this manner the bill passed. James Geddes, Esq. made a survey of the route of this canal, among others, and his report may be found in the journals of 1826, p. 5, Appendix F.

At the session of the legislature in 1826, petitions were again presented for the construction of this canal; and Mr. Allen, chairman of the committee on canals, reported a bill for the construction of the work, which was lost on its third reading. The report will be found in the journal of 1826, p. 1031.

At the session of 1827, the subject was again before the legislature, and a favorable report was again made, which will be found in journals 1827, p. 565. The bill at that session passed the house by a decided majority, but was lost in the Senate. The principal objections urged in 1826 and '27, against the application, were, that the cost of construction was not sufficiently ascertained, and that the supply of water on the summit level was doubtful.

At the last session of the legislature, the subject was again presented for their consideration. The petitioners supposed from the minute surveys and estimates of Messrs. Roberts & Hutchinson, both as to the sufficiency of water and the cost of construction, which were then presented, (and accompany this report, marked A.) and which had been the principal objections urged against their claims at former sessions, all doubts on these subjects had been removed. The canal committee were however divided in opinion, and two very able reports were presented to the legislature. The one by Mr. Mann, for the majority of the committee against the measure, which will be found in the journal of 1828, p. 515. The other, by Mr. Granger, for the minority of the committee, which he introduced as a substitute for the report of the majority, accompanied by a bill for the construction of the canal; vide journal 1828, p. 522. This report was adopted by the house, and the bill passed by a decided vote. The bill was again rejected in the Senate, and principally, it is supposed, on account of the questions that were raised at the preceding session.

The petitioners supposed they had put these questions at rest, by the additional estimates and surveys which they had caused to be made by Messrs. Roberts and Hutchinson, able and experienced engineers. In order, however, as far as possible, to remove all doubt on these subjects, the friends of this canal during the past season employed Benjamin Wright, Esq. late chief engineer on the Erie canal, a name identified with the splendid works of internal improvements, which has raised our state to an enviable pre-eminence, and whose opinion need only to be known to receive implicit confidence.

He has minutely examined the route of the canal, re-examined the estimates made by Messrs. Roberts & Hutchinson, and is decidedly of opinion that there is an abundant supply of water on the summit level, without resorting to the contingent and secondary supply.

He remarks "that with the measurement of the water made by Nathan S. Roberts, a gentleman long known to me for his care, and caution and accuracy in all such calculations," &c., "I viewed the several streams proposed as feeding water for the summit. I found them (as represented by the inhabitants of the neighborhood) at an average of common summer water; but evidently considerably more water than was given by Mr. Roberts in his report on the several streams, was now discharged daily by them. I did not consider it proper to measure them, being long accustomed to measure water, and determine its volume and amount as to feeding a canal. I could readily, and without hesitation, say, that the quantity which might be obtained in the manner and upon the plan as laid down by Mr. Roberts, would be entirely sufficient, without ever resorting to the contingent and secondary supply of Oneida creek, Hatch's pond, or either of the proposed reservoirs on the east and west branch."

"I am of opinion that the Leland pond reservoir, with either the east or west branch," (of the Chenango river,) "will, if care is taken to make the summit level tight, and to keep that level from all useless waste of water, (by keeping the gates of all the locks from the summit, to a point where another supply of feeding water may be received,) as nearly water-tight as possible, and only permitting surplus water to pass, by side culverts, from one lock to another, when they are not in use. This supply, with good management, will equal any demand which the trade will require for many years to come; and whenever it shall be wanted, a resort may be had to other sources, although I am now of opinion, that no more water will be wanted for this canal, than can be supplied by the Leland pond reservoir, and either the east or west branch, provided the trade should require a daily passage of sixty boats through the summer season."

In relation to the feasibility of the work, Judge Wright remarks: "I can assure you, gentlemen, that the valley of the Chenango river, from the town of Madison, presents a formation of ground most extraordinary favorable for easy excavation of a canal; so much so, that I do not think the whole state of New-York can present a similar continuous distance, where nature has given a formation more favorable for such a work, and more easy and cheaply executed."

His remarks relative to the northern termination of the canal, are equally favorable. He also examined with care and attention, the estimates of the expense of the work, as made by Mr. Hutchinson, and with some additions as to two or three items, concurs in those estimates; concluding, that the canal can be made for less than one million of dollars, the amount which was last year inserted in the bill that passed the house. The committee would refer to the report of Judge Wright, which accompanies this report, marked B.; in which he expresses an opinion as to the probable income of the canal, if completed; and concludes by remarking, "If a canal is to be made to connect the Erie canal with the Susquehannah, the Chenango valley ought to be the place of location for the first work.

The committee have given a statement of the proceedings relative to the application for the construction of this canal, down to the present time; from which it appears that every demand for information in relation to it, has been promptly afforded by the friends of the measure: And in the opinion of the committee, they have now given such testimony on the subject, as not only to justify, but to call upon the legislature to grant their application.

The committee will state, generally, the reasons that induce them to report in favor of the construction of this canal; but they will be as brief as they, consistent with their duty, can be, and refer to the able and detailed reports that have heretofore been made to the legislature on this subject. They propose to follow the order laid down by the minority of the canal committee, at the last session, and in the first place to ascertain whether the construction of the work is practicable. On this subject, if the least doubt has hitherto existed, it is now most clearly demonstrated by the report of Judge Wright, in addition to all the other reports of Geddes, Forman, Roberts and Hutchinson, that no part of the state of New-York presents a continuous route of the same distance, more favorable for the construction of a canal, than the Chenango valley.

The next question is, can the work be completed for the estimated expenditure? The committee would here refer to the report of the Hon. C. D. Colden, chairman of the canal committee in the Senate in 1827, in which it is remarked: "The excavation, embankments, aqueducts, locks, culverts, &c., and the cost of every foot of these, may now be calculated, so as to leave little or nothing to conjecture. If, therefore, a proper survey of a canal route be presented, there is no difficulty in determining what funds will be requisite for its execution." The committee concur in the above statement, and present the supposed cost of the work, as estimated by Mr. Roberts and Mr. Hutchinson, upon the plan suggested by the canal committee of the hon. the Senate.

Estimate, from the summit, north, as calculated by Mr. Hutchinson.

19 miles of excavation, embankment, &c.,	$76,000 00

Add 10 per cent. for engineering, &c.,	50,525 80

In addition to these estimates, made by competent and qualified engineers, Judge Wright, after examining the estimates, gives it as his opinion, that the canal can be made for a less sum than $1,000,000. So that full and perfect confidence, in the opinion of the committee, can be placed in the estimates for the construction of this work.

The next question is, will this canal yield a return to your treasury sufficient to warrant its construction?

On this subject, the committee subjoin some statements, as to the probable amount of revenue to be derived from this work, when completed; and if from analogy, any thing certain can be ascertained, it would seem that the income from this canal would be considerably more than sufficient to pay for all repairs, and the interest upon the cost of its construction.

Report of 1828.—"The Erie and Champlain canals, upon navigable communications of 433 miles, have produced in tolls, during the year 1827, $859,058 48. Giving to the Chenango canal the same tolls, and allow her to send rateably to market the same amount of products, and that work, if now in operation, would return a revenue of $184,509 09."

"It is said these canals draw a large amount from the shores and outlets of our interior lakes; for as yet, very little has been drawn beyond the boundary of this state, your committee would present another view of the subject. It is fair to allow to this work as well what it would throw upon the Erie canal, as the tolls to be gathered upon its own waters."

"The distance from Binghamton to Albany, by the Chenango canal, is nearly the same as from Montezuma to Albany. For the purpose now in view, let us consider these two canals as meeting at Utica, and exclude that office from the calculation on both, there will then be found to have been collected in the year 1827, west of Utica and east of Montezuma, the sum of $179,677 86
Add, from the eastern market, of merchandize, one fifth, which is the lowest estimate of any country,..... 35,935 57

In this estimate is embraced the produce brought down from the Seneca and Cayuga lakes, and which is very considerable."

"Should it be said that the tolls on salt are here included, it may well be answered that these tolls are but half those imposed on agricultural products; and that the market which would be opened for that article, by the construction of the proposed communication, would increase the tolls upon the Erie, and give to those on the Chenango canal, an amount equal to all that can be claimed from this objection."

"To test the question of probable revenue, by a comparison in which is embraced no extraneous advantages, let the tolls drawn by the Erie canal from a section of country purely agricultural, be considered. The country paying tolls at Lyons, does not exceed a section of sixteen by twenty-four miles, and within which is nothing taken to market but ordinary agricultural products. This point is 27 miles farther from Albany than Binghamton. The tolls paid at Lyons in 1826, were $26,469 24. In 1827 they had increased to $30,459 66
Add $\frac{1}{5}$ for ascending trade,..... 6,093 27

"A resistless argument is here presented to the minds of your committee, by this example, to shew the revenue to be derived from such means of conveyance, through a farming country. When your committee consider the sources from which the village of Binghamton would draw the products to this canal, they cannot doubt that the tolls there would be treble those of a section as limited as that paying at Lyons, or that the intermediate offices between Binghamton and Utica would stand like that at Rome, which during the year 1827 paid more than $25,000 on descending trade alone."

Another comparison may be founded upon the population paying toll on the Erie canal, and those who would pay toll on the Chenango canal; the business of the Erie canal is for the year 1827, only about one year after its completion.

The tolls received on the Erie canal at Utica, and all the places of collection west, to Buffalo, were, in 1827, $534,593 98. The population of that part of the state, west of Oneida and Madison, including Oneida, was, by the census of 1825, 530,784 inhabitants. We may for comparison calculate that the inhabitants which will be accommodated by the Chenango canal will be,

Madison county,	35,646
Chenango,	34,215
Broome,	13,893
Cortland,	20,271
Tioga,	19,951
	122,976

Parts of Oneida, Otsego and Delaware, which will be benefitted by the Chenango canal, are omitted, being off-setts to parts of Madison and Cortland that use the Erie canal.

If we further calculate that as many of the inhabitants of Pennsylvania would use the Chenango canal, as now go from the southern counties to the Erie canal at Utica, we may institute the following proportion.

If 531,000 inhabitants pay on the Erie canal $534,593 98, what will 120,000 pay on Chenango? The result will be..... $120,810
This is based on tolls of 1827. Add increase of population, 3 years, up to 1831, when canal may be completed. 3 years at 5 per cent. equal to 15 per cent..... 18,122

It will be seen in this estimate of population on the Erie canal, we include the inhabitants within and along the territory on the borders of lake Ontario, and on the waters of the Allegany, who send a portion of their produce to foreign markets.

In this estimate, there is not included any tolls upon salt, plaster and lime, for the inhabitants below Tioga Point, on the Susquehannah. Salt and plaster are now sent down the Susquehannah 200 miles, under all the embarrassment of land transportation. Nor is there any estimate for the trade in coal; nor for tolls that will be received on the Erie canal.

Suppose that below Tioga point there are 30,000 families to be supplied with salt and plaster, and 10,000 with lime, and that each family will require one barrel of salt, half a ton of plaster and five bushels of lime, annually, we there have

Salt,.....	4,286 tons,	Am't brought forward,	$138,932
Plaster,.....	15,000 "
Lime,.....	5,356 "
	24,642 tons,
which at half a cent per ton per mile, on 93 miles canal,.....			11,458
Add the amount of tolls to be received on 50,000 tons of coal, say ..			23,250
And we have in tolls, ...			$173,640

If we make a like calculation, taking as the basis the number of acres of improved land, and confining ourselves to this state exclusively, and in the western counties before enumerated, we have 2,082,798 acres of improved land. In 1825 the Chenango valley was estimated to contain 583,588 acres of improved land. Now if 2,082,798 acres have produced $534,593 08, 583,588 acres will, at same rate, produce $149,790.

The estimated cost of the canal is, ...$1,000,000
The interest on this sum, at 5 per cent., is.....	50,000
Repairs of canal, as estimated by canal commissioners, $100 per mile, but say.....	20,000
There will be 105 locks; one man at each lock for 8 months in the year at $20 per month, which is a larger sum than probably will be required,.....	16,800
	86,800
Add for contingencies, 10 per cent.,.....	8,680
	$95,480

Taking the sum which is produced by the above comparisons, and we have at least $30,000 annually as a sinking fund for the disbursement of the original debt.

In addition to these calculations, it may be considered that the construction of such a work is, as so much money, as will be expended in its construction, distributed among the people. For an impetus will be given to their habits of industry, and in addition to all the ordinary avocations of the people, they will have done much towards the execution of the public works.

The increased value given to property, both real and personal, with the facilities to trade and manufactures, and the advantages given to agriculture, will be immense. The increase also of population, wealth and business of any section of country, through which a canal may be constructed, will be very great.

Mr. Colden in his report to the Senate, in 1827, before alluded to, remarks on this subject, "that every part of the state is entitled to share in the advantages which may be derived from canals, made at the public expense; and that the profit and loss of works of this description should not be measured with scrupulous exactness. The advantage they afford to the state is not merely their money produce, but the increase of the wealth of the country, and the prosperity of its inhabitants."

The last question to which the committee directed their attention, was, whether the situation of the finances of the state would justify a compliance with the wishes of the petitioners.

In relation to this branch of the subject, the committee are unanimous in the opinion, that the time has not yet arrived, in which it would be wise for this state to arrest the progress of her great system of internal improvement. The situation of the funds of the state are not materially different from last year. The receipts upon the canals from tolls during the last year are $822,134 87; being $26,923 61 less than 1827, owing principally to the failure of the wheat crops.

The committee adopt the conclusion of the report of the minority of the canal committee of last year, as containing substantially their own views on this part of the subject.

After adverting to the situation of the canal fund, as presented at the last session, the committee remark:

"Your committee will now consider the situation of our finances, as disconnected from the canal fund, with a view to ascertain whether this period is more inauspicious for continuing further internal improvements than was the day of their commencement, and indeed the whole time of their progress and execution.

"An alarm seems to have been excited from the fear that we may be compelled to resort to the half mill tax to meet the ordinary expenses of government, and that it may be necessary to resort to the general fund to pay the interest upon the loans for the construction of this work, until its completion, should it be admitted that from that period it will meet the interest upon its debt, and all its contingent expenses; inasmuch as the funds already appropriated to the canal, are forbidden to be withdrawn and added to the general fund of your state, and inasmuch as your committee think they are prepared to show, that this canal can go into operation, without calling upon the state to advance more money from the treasury, than the creation and disposal of the stock contemplated will carry to it; they do not see that the levying or refusing to levy the half mill tax for the ordinary expenses of government, should in any manner interfere with the decision upon this question.

"When the Erie and Champlain canals were commenced, our people were laboring under a state tax of two mills on the dollar.

"Ground was broken for the Erie canal, 4th July, 1817, after the auction and salt duties, and then existing steam-boat tax, had been withdrawn from the general fund and pledged to the canals, which pledge was made by the same legislature that voted a tax of two mills on the dollar, for the expenses of government. That tax was continued till the winter of 1819; from which year to the close of 1823 inclusive, a tax of one mill on the dollar was levied, which was then reduced to half a mill, and thus continued until 1825."

The aggregate amount of the general fund, as stated by the Comptroller, in his report made to the legislature January 14, 1829, is $1,644,986.79. The estimated expense of government for the current year, is $291,500; and the revenue of the general fund, without infringing upon the principal, is calculated at $172,550; leaving a deficiency of $118,950. For this balance, provision must be made, by collection of debts, by sale of public stocks, or by a resort to the half mill tax, as recommended by the Comptroller. But if it shall appear, on examination, that the Chenango canal can be constructed without the advance of a dollar from your treasury, and that when completed, its income will meet all its necessities, your committee are not aware that the levying of the said tax should in any manner affect the question presented.

"Considering the improvement to be constructed, without connecting it with the canal fund, and assuming what your committee trust is already proved, that after its completion it would be a creditor and not a debtor at your treasury, and supposing not one dollar should have been received in tolls until its entire completion, although the section from the summit north, might be opened the second year; how, then, would it stand at your treasury, should the state loan its credit for the creation of a new stock, to construct this work, bearing an interest of 5 per cent., redeemable in 30 years?

"Suppose this stock to bring the average premium of the stock loaned the Hudson and Delaware company, which was near 10 per cent.; it would produce a fund of $100,000. This work can be constructed in three years. The interest on the loans, supposing them to be made at the commencement of each year, and in equal sums, would be as follows:

First loan on $333,333$\frac{1}{3}$, at 5 per cent., ...	$16,666	66$\frac{2}{3}$
Second do 666,666$\frac{2}{3}$, do do	33,333	33$\frac{1}{3}$
Third do 1,000,000, do do	50,000	00
	$100,000	00

The sum in the treasury from the premium on the stock created.

"If, then, as your committee believe, the tolls upon this canal when completed, would meet its expenses and the interest upon its debt, this work can be added to those already in operation, without calling upon the state for money from the treasury.

"Without dwelling upon the advantages to be derived by a community from the creation of public stocks for improvements, which, in their construction, throw the money loaned, into circulation among its people, and which, by their accomplishment, create the means of extinguishing the debt they have caused, your committee would call the attention of the house to the distinction between responsibilities assumed for such purposes, and those which burthen a government, and generally arise from war, that grand impoverisher of nations.

"There are many questions of state policy, the wisdom or folly of which may be illustrated by a practical example from individual enterprise, and none to which this remark applies with more force than to the question before us. Debts usually contracted by governments, may be compared to those which, in private life, arise from disaster or improvidence; to meet which, the individual must pledge his estate. And while he thus weakens his credit and diminishes his resources, adds to his expenditures by placing a moth upon his fortune, that consumes continually and creates nothing to meet that consumption. But the responsibilities assumed by a sovereignty, for the advancement of those enterprises, which, while they afford facilities to its people, furnish reasonable promise of future gain, are like those debts contracted by an individual to improve a dormant property, whose slumbering resources are thus to be brought into action, and which is thus enabled to yield to its proprietor the monies he may have expended, and to furnish a sure source of future income.

"The policy which would now arrest the progress of further improvements, would appear to your committee, to proceed upon the assumption, that with the extinguishment of the debt contracted for the construction of the Erie and Champlain canals, the canal fund is to be stricken from our exchequer; that these splendid monuments of art will cease to exist; that these almost exhaustless fountains of wealth will be dried up, and their streams no longer flow to enrich your treasury. A single thought dispels this illusion, and presents that period as a day of glad promise to this people.

"Let the inquiring mind ask, what the state of New-York may desire that she cannot then accomplish? When her own resources shall have been fully developed, and when her waters shall be wearied with the conveyance of that flood of wealth which will pour in upon her from the vast vallies of Erie, of Ontario, of Huron and of Michigan. Does the mind refuse to contemplate this subject but by the test of experience? Let it descend to a brief estimate, founded upon facts that cannot be shaken.

"In 1825, the commissioners of the canal fund reported their belief, that by the year 1836, the tolls upon the canals, and the other sources of revenue from the canal fund, would extinguish the then existing canal debts. Two causes, which after this year, will be nearly removed, have prevented the reduction of that debt as rapid as expected. These have been, the monies expended in the construction of the Oswego, and Cayuga & Seneca canals, and for permanent repairs upon the Erie and Champlain canals. The tolls have exceeded, in each year, the estimates upon which those calculations were based.

"To place these estimates at sums which, it is believed, will not be doubted by any one, who, from the past forms an opinion of the future, let us suppose the existing debt to be discharged by the year 1840. The annual income of the Erie canal may then safely be placed at..... $1,500,00 00
Auction duties as now,..... 300,000 00
Salt duties " 130,000 00

$1,930,000 00

A sum sufficient to construct annually a work equal to this contemplated canal.

"The only remaining question is, does justice and policy, under the circumstances presented, require the construction of the work?

"The remarks upon this branch of the subject are not intended solely to apply to those inhabiting the country to be benefitted by the Chenango canal; but as equally applicable to all those counties bordering upon Pennsylvania and New-Jersey, or that are located between lakes Champlain and Ontario. And in expressing their opinion of what is due to those seeking this improvement, they wish to be understood as fostering the hope, that as the public resources will permit, channels of communications, fitted to the nature and situation of the country, may be extended to every section of the state.

"If it be necessary to dwell for a moment upon the advantages which some parts of our state are now reaping from this system of improvement, which has been matured by the common credit and the common funds, and for which every section of your state has been pledged; let us reflect upon the situation of those western counties bordering upon the canal, and compare their present prosperity with the gloom which pervaded that whole community before the light of this policy broke in upon them.

"The high prices paid for agricultural products in those years, during the war and immediately succeeding the general peace in Europe, had produced among that people an eager anxiety to possess themselves of lands, for which were often paid extravagant prices. The British colonies were the channel of communication to foreign markets; and there were few products of the soil that were not then much more valuable in the counties of Cayuga and Ontario, than they now are in the city of New-York. The farmers were surrounded by every comfort of life, and their wealth was rapidly increasing. This sunshine of prosperity was suddenly clouded. The ports of Europe were closed—no market presented itself but in the Atlantic towns, and that country produced no article that could bear land transportation thither.

"Under the excitement created by the prospect of heavy gains, debts had been contracted to an alarming extent, and the promised means of payment had vanished. Wheat, the great staple of the country, instantly fell to one-fifth its former value. A general system of retrenchment was adopted, but this was unavailing. The interest upon debts was accumulating to a ruinous extent; pressure from abroad upon creditors, necessarily produced pressure upon debtors at home, and the stoutest hearts began to quail as they contemplated the result.

"At that period, every article of agricultural product, bore as high a price in the Atlantic market as it now does; but they knew it only through the columns of a newspaper; it brought no succour to him who had to encounter a land carriage of two hundred miles to reach those markets. They had heard of the Erie canal, but the mind could not contemplate its results, and a general depression pervaded that whole community. In the villages the bustle of business had been succeeded by the restlessness of disappointments; in the country, an universal apathy had seized the people.

"But to that section of our state, this day of gloom was of short duration. A water communication was opened to that people, and again they were aroused to action. The labourer felt that he no longer "spent his strength for that which is nought"—the husbandman met a fair return for his toils; and from that moment, all has been prosperity and happiness.

"The line of that canal is sprinkled with villages of its own creation, exhibiting all the show and luxury of commercial life, and that whole country is advancing in wealth and in refinement, with a firmer tread than at any other period of its history.

"Let this be contrasted with the situation of those inhabiting the counties bordering upon Pennsylvania.

"Under the same excitement that has pervaded their western brethren, they too had become heavily oppressed by debt; and like them, had almost sunk to despondency. Shut out from market, but through the hazardous waters of the Susquehannah; remembering the early expression in their favor, from those to whom these interests had been confided; and viewing the returning prosperity of their more favored brethren, they were naturally led to the examination of their valleys, to search out channels of communication to the Atlantic markets. Conscious of having contributed their full proportion to the works already constructed, and viewing the benefits which experience has shown must flow from the judicious extension of a system more flattering in result than even in promise; reflecting that while they had always borne without murmuring every burthen imposed for the trial of a most costly experiment, in which they could not be benefitted, unless that experiment should result in the extension of its blessings to the country which they inhabit; and feeling that in no shape had they received from government any favor, but that of guardianship, they had promised themselves a participation in those benefits which had been conferred upon others, and which your committee most confidently believe may ere long be extended to our whole people."

In conclusion the committee would remark, that in their opinion, our splendid works of internal improvement are but begun. At present our great canal is but as a passway through our state. If we desire to give to our own citizens all the advantages they have a right to claim at our hands—then we must open our fertile valleys to the Erie canal, and thereby arrest the tide of emigration that is now setting with almost resistless force to the west. By opening communications with those portions of our state, that are now destitute of a commodious access to market, we shall afford inducements to those now there, to cultivate and improve their lands, and to those who are stretching to Michigan and Ohio, to stop and people some of our fertile valleys.

It is our duty, as fast as our finances will permit, to send out lateral canals to the north and the south—that our now useless forests may be felled down—our lands cultivated, and vast quantities of produce from the interior find its way to our great Atlantic emporium.

We must take our choice between increased and increasing wealth and prosperity, by extending our communications to every part of our state—and comparative feebleness, by leaving many portions of our state, as they now are, deprived of convenient access to market.

It is an undoubted truth, that all the great interests of society must rely for their support and encouragement on the flourishing condition of internal trade, which can never exist without facility of communication.

The committee conclude by expressing a hope that the prediction of the illustrious Fulton will one day be realised, when "canals will run through every valley and wind round every hill."

They have instructed their chairman to ask leave to introduce a bill for the construction of the Chenango canal.

[For Documents A. and B. referred to in this Report, see Appendix A.]

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Johnson, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act authorising the construction of the Chenango canal;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Ordered, That the usual number of copies of the said bill, report, and accompanying documents, be printed for the use of the legislature.

Mr. Jones, from the select committee to whom was referred the engrossed bill from the Senate, entitled "An act relative to the Brooklyn Savings Bank," reported, that they have examined the said bill, and see no reason why the same should not be passed into a law.

Ordered, That the said bill be committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. J. Hall, from the select committee to which was referred the petition of sundry inhabitants of the town of Pompey in the county of Onondaga, praying for the passage of an act to alter the time of holding the annual town-meetings in said town, reported:

That they have had the same under consideration; from which it appears, that at the last town-meeting in said town, it was voted almost unanimously, that application be made to the legislature now in session, for the passage of a law to alter the time of holding the annual town-meetings in said town, from the last Tuesday in April, to the first Tuesday in March. The committee have therefore instructed their chairman to ask leave to introduce a bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. J. Hall, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to alter the time of holding the annual town-meetings in the town of Pompey in the county of Onondaga;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. W. Hall, from the committee on engrossed bills, reported, that they have examined the engrossed bill, entitled "An act for the relief of the trustees of the Rensselaer Oswego academy;" and that the said bill is correctly engrossed.

The said engrossed bill, entitled "An act for the relief of the trustees of the Rensselaer Oswego academy," was read the third time.

Resolved, That the bill do pass.

Ordered, That the clerk deliver the said bill to the Senate, and request their concurrence to the same.

In pursuance of previous notice, Mr. Brinkerhoff asked for and obtained leave to bring in a bill entitled "An act to relieve the county of Cayuga from the expenses of maintaining William L. Pierce in the jail of said county;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Seely gave notice that he would, on some future day, ask leave to bring in a bill, providing for the appointment of inspectors of unslaked lime.

Ordered, That Mr. Paige have leave of absence for four days, and Mr. Barnett for six days.

On motion of Mr. Johnson,

Resolved, That the committee on canals and internal improvements be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of John and James Ledgerwood and Andrew P. Tillman, and that the same be referred to the canal commissioners; and that they be requested to report to this house, the facts in their possession relative to the claims of the petitioners, and whether any extra compensation is due, in their opinion, to the petitioners, or either of them, for services rendered as stated in their petitions.

On motion of Mr. Tower,

Resolved, That the committee on canals and internal improvements be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of the inhabitants of the town of Utica, for the lowering of Oneida lake, and for other purposes therein mentioned; and that the same be referred to the canal commissioners, who are hereby requested to report to this house, their opinion on the practicability and feasibility of lowering said lake by cutting down the outlet thereof, and the making said outlet or river navigable, as set forth in said petition, with their opinion of the probable expense; and that they report their views of the effect of this improvement on the canal revenues, and as to giving increased value to lands adjoining said lake.

The house then proceeded to the consideration of the report of the committee of the whole, on the bill entitled "An act exempting persons employed as clerks in post-offices, from militia duty;" the same being amended by the house, was again read, in the words following, to wit:

An act exempting persons employed as clerks in post-offices, from militia duty.

The People of the State of New-York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

Section 1. All persons who may be constantly and necessarily employed as clerks in any post-office within this state, are exempted, during the period of such employment, from militia duty; but every such clerk, in order to entitle himself to the benefit of such exemption, shall procure and deliver to the commanding officer of the company in which he may be enrolled, a certificate, signed by the postmaster in whose office he may be employed, accompanied by his own affidavit, certifying that such clerk was, on (and for at least one month immediately preceding) the day or days of muster or parade from which he claims an exemption, regularly and constantly employed as a clerk in his office, and that his services were necessary to the due performance of the duties thereof.

Mr. Speaker put the question whether the house whould agree to the report of the committee of the whole as amended, and it was determined in the negative.

That many years have passed away since the state sold the pre-emption right to these lands, the Indians reserving possession during their pleasure. The presumption is, that at the time the purchase was made, no one surmised they would remain this length of time upon the lands. What equivalent was made the state for this privilege, the committee are not able to communicate for the information of the house; but it is fair to presume something. The object of the committee at present is, to give the facts and information within their reach, which present some of the reasons why the state is interested in the granting of the favor asked for.

The situation of this tract extends from Lake Erie to the line of the county of Genesee, composed of very low grounds, on the Buffalo creek, almost dividing the county of Erie in the centre, of about eight miles in width, at present travelled where each one chooses to select for his convenience or safety. For many years past, the most usual selection has been the beach along the margin of the lake, but during the last three years, the lake, from some unknown cause, has risen some three or four feet, which completely covers the former beach, so as to be almost impassable. During the summer months, the great difficulty is avoided by resorting to steam-boats and vessels for those whose business or pleasure makes it necessary to go any considerable distance up the lake. The remainder of the season, the lake becomes impassable by means of ice, during which the weary traveller has been obliged to seek his way as well as he could, across the reservation. This great chain of communication, it appears to your committee, should not be interrupted. Since the completion of the Erie canal, the tide of emigration is greater, perhaps, towards the territory of Michigan and the state of Ohio, than any other part of the United States, which must all pass, necessarily, this reservation. It is also a mail route, on which the mail is carried every day: the contract is to that effect. The citizens of that region of country, owing to their limited means, have become somewhat discouraged towards ever accommodating the public with a good road, without aid from the state. And as this, if accomplished, will be useful to all of our citizens who may by chance be obliged to encounter this unpleasant task: many precedents will be found in the journals, as will justify all who may have doubts upon the subject of granting the partial relief solicited.

Buffalo is the nearest point for the people of Cattaraugus, Chautauque and the south part of Erie, to reach the Erie canal with their produce; although this part of the state has not long been settled, and has not, as yet, had much surplus produce to be sent to market. But every year it will increase. In ordinary seasons, therefore, in addition to relieving the pressing necessities of this people, you will add much to the tolls on the canal.

Under all these circumstances, the committee are impressed with the belief that the petitioners present a strong claim upon the liberality and justice of the legislature; and believing it to be the duty of all governments to relieve the burden of its members, when circumstances like the present case exist, have therefore prepared a bill, and directed their chairman to ask leave to introduce the same.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Burt, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to lay out and improve a road through the Buffalo Indian reservation in the county of Erie;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Ordered, That the usual number of copies of the said bill and report be printed for the use of the legislature.

Mr. Burt, from the committee on the establishment and improvement of roads and bridges, and the incorporation of turnpike companies, to which was referred the petition of William Rose and others, praying for the passage of a law to authorise them to erect a free bridge across the Chenango river in the county of Broome, asked for leave to report by bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Burt, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act authorising the erection of a free bridge across the Chenango river, in the town of Chenango in the county of Broome;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Al Burtis, from the committee on the incorporation of charitable and religious societies, to which was referred the petition of Aaron M'Graw, reported:

That they have had the same under consideration; and are led to remark, that an application coming from so unfortunate a fellow-being as a mute, is calculated to excite compassion. But taking into view that this applicant has been already assisted by the state, to the extent of the law of 1825, which makes provision for the tuition and subsistence of each mute which is received at the Central Asylum for the tuition of the deaf and dumb, for the term of four years; and that there are numerous indigent applicants for which there is no provision; and that the object of those institutions more especially is to fit them for the transaction of the ordinary business of life, and enabling them to act understandingly as to the present and future destiny of man; the committee believing those objects to have been effected as it respects this individual, and that equal justice should be extended to all, have been led to conclude that the prayer of the petitioner ought not to be granted.

Resolved, That the petitioner have leave to withdraw his petition.

Thereupon,

Resolved, That this house do agree with the committee in the preceding report and resolution.

Mr. Myers, from the select committee to which was referred the petition of sundry inhabitants of the city of New-York, praying for the incorporation of the Company of Moa, reported:

That they have had the same under consideration, and believe the following to be the facts connected with said petition:

It appears that the petitioners have purchased a large and valuable tract of land in the Island of Cuba, and have paid for the same; and that they have taken measures to settle their property with an American population, and to establish plantations for the cultivation of coffee, sugar and tobacco; which, together with the valuable timber which is growing on their lands, such as ebony, lignum vitæ and red cedar, will, it is believed, in a short time enable them to open a considerable and productive commerce between their possessions and the port of New-York. The property of the company is situated in that part of the island, which has heretofore harbored a band of pirates; and that by settling an American establishment at the large and commodious harbor of Moa, it would give protection to our commerce, and afford water and supplies of provisions to our navy.

It appears, that to carry fully into effect the object of the association, it will be necessary for them to put one or more vessels in the trade; and also to enable them to conduct their business to advantage, it will be necessary for them to hold some real estate in the city of New-York; and that purchases and sales must necessarily be made on account of the company. And in case of differences arising between the agent or agents of the company and individuals, such as are common in commercial transactions, it would be difficult for either of the parties to commence or defend a suit at law, without an act of incorporation; as the stock of the company is divided into four hundred shares, which are frequently changing owners, by reason of sales and transfers. It would therefore be difficult to conduct a law-suit, as the names of all the owners or associates would necessarily have to be included in such suit.

Tne committee are therefore of opinion that no injury could result either to the state or individuals, and that, on the contrary, the incorporation of the company would be a public benefit. They have prepared a bill accordingly, and directed their chairman to ask for leave to introduce the same.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Myers, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to incorporate the Company of Moa;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. W. Hall, from the committee on engrossed bills, reported, that they have examined the engrossed bill entitled "An act to authorise the canal commissioner to pay certain monies to the supervisor of the town of Fayette in the county of Seneca," and the engrossed bill entitled "An act incorporating the Susquehannah bridge company of the village of Binghamton;" and that the said bills are correctly engrossed.

The said engrossed bill, entitled "An act to authorise the canal commissioner to pay certain monies to the supervisor of the town of Fayette in the county of Seneca," was read the third time.

Resolved, That the bill do pass.

The said engrossed bill, entitled "An act incorporating the Susquehannah bridge company of the village of Binghamton," was read the third time.

Mr. Speaker put the question whether the house would agree to the final passage of the said bill, and it was determined in the affirmative, two-thirds of all the members elected to this house voting in favor thereof, as follows, to wit:

Ordered, That the said report be laid upon the table.

The annual report of E. A. Le Breton, inspector of hops for the city and county of Albany, was read, in the words following, to wit:

ALBANY, January 23, 1829.

To the Honorable the Legislature of the State of New-York.

The inspector of hops for the city and county of Albany, takes leave to report, that he has inspected, within the year ending the first day of January 1829, one thousand two hundred sixty-three bales of hops, weighing 277,502 pounds, raised in and presented from the following counties:

Madison,.....	151,268	pounds.
Otsego, ...	18,467	"
Onondaga, ...	16,962	"
Herkimer, ...	4,329	"
Columbia, ...	2,616	"
Monroe, ...	2.369	"
Franklin, ...	2,336	"
Oneida,.....	76,366	"
Saratoga, ...	990	"
Chenango, ...	925	"
Oswego, ...	347	"
Bennington, (Vermont,)	527	"
	277,502	pounds of hops.

The amount of fees for inspecting the same, is ... $277 50

Of the quantity above reported, is 22,646 pounds of hops the growth of 1827, which, in consequence of the great depression of the market last season, were retained in the country. The growth of this year falls far short of the expectation of the raisers: the vines were very much injured by the ravages of the worm; and in the latter part of the season, frequent rains occasioned a rust, that materially injured the crop. The raisers have done their work much better the present season, and the hops have gone into market a much better sample, than for years back. The average price of hops has been about 9½ cents per pound; this low price has partly been occasioned by the large quantity remaining in store of the previous year's growth, and partly the depression of the brewing business in this state.

All which is respectfully submitted,

E. A. LE BRETON.

Ordered, That the said report be laid upon the table.

A copy of a resolution of the senate, delivered by their clerk, was read, informing that the Senate do adhere to their resolution of non-concurrence to the amendments of this house to the resolution fixing upon a day for the appointment of a comptroller and attorney-general.

Hall, from the said committee, reported, that the committee had gone through the said bill, and agreed to the same without amendment; which he was directed to report to the house, and he read the report in his place, and delivered the same in at the table, where it was again read and agreed to by the house, and the bill ordered to a third reading.

Mr. Edgerton, from the committee on privileges and elections, to which was referred the petition of Daniel W. Bostwick, of the county of Seneca, praying to be admitted to a seat in this house, in the place of the Honorable Septimus Evans, the sitting member, with the accompanying documents, reported:

By the official certificate of the board of county canvassers of the county of Seneca, on file in the office of the Secretary of State, a copy of which has been furnished the committee, it appears, that at the last annual election held in the said county, on the 3d, 4th and 5th days of November last, the Hon. Septimus Evans received 1559 votes, and the petitioner, Daniel W. Bostwick, received 1558 votes, giving the sitting member a majority of one vote.

The petitioner claims to have allowed to him four votes, given in the town of Junius in said county, which were rejected by the inspectors of election in said town, on the canvass of the votes. The four votes claimed by the petitioner, are of the following description: Two votes for Danl. W. Bostwick, one vote for Daniel Bostwick, and one vote for D. W. Bostwick. The said four votes, as above named and abbreviated, were found in the proper box, for the office of members of assembly. In support of the prayer of the petitioner, the affidavit of Henry Moses, supervisor of the town of Junius, has been furnished the committee; which fully shows the facts above stated, and also that the said four votes were not allowed by the town inspectors in canvassing the votes of said town, but were wholly rejected. It further appears by the affidavit of the said supervisor, that the four votes above mentioned and described, were not preserved, nor were copies of the same kept or sent to the county clerk of said county, or preserved in the office of the town clerk of the town of Junius; but that the same were destroyed on the evening of the fifth day of November, at the time the votes of the town of Junius were canvassed.

It further appears by the affidavit of the said supervisor, that on canvassing the votes of said town at the time above mentioned, the said inspectors of election found a ballot in the box appropriated for congress and electors, in the words following: Daniel W. Bostwick and Erastus Woodworth; which said ballot was headed, labelled or endorsed, "for members of assembly"; and that the said ballot was not counted or estimated by the said canvassers for or in favor of any person whatever, nor was the same preserved, or a copy of the same, nor was the said ballot estimated or returned to the board of county canvassers; the said supervisor having been one of the said board of county canvassers.

It also further appears from the affidavit of the said supervisor, that he has resided in the county of Seneca for the last twenty years past, and that he does not know, or has he heard of any other person residing in the county, of the name of Bostwick, except Daniel W. Bostwick, the name of the petitioner, who was a well-known candidate for the office of member of assembly, regularly nominated in the years 1827 and 1828.

In support of the allegations of the petitioner, it further appears, by the affidavit of Robert Sloan, one of the assessors of the town of Junius, and also one of the board of inspectors of elections in said town, that on the canvass of the votes of the said town, there were several scattering and abbreviated votes found in the box appropriated for ballots for members of assembly, which were not counted or allowed to Bostwick, but were rejected. He also further states, that he recollects, on the canvass of the ballots of members of congress and electors, one vote was found in the box appropriated to that purpose, on which was printed or written, the names of Erastus Woodworth and Daniel W. Bostwick; which ballot or ballots were not canvassed or estimated for either of the said persons, who were candidates for members of assembly, and that neither of the votes so found in either of the boxes, for members of assembly, were allowed or preserved; but that the same were rejected and destroyed, and the same were not returned to the board of county canvassers, or copies of the same taken or preserved in the office of the town clerk of the town of Junius. It further appears by the affidavit of the said assessor, that he has resided in the said town of Junius for many years, and that he does not know of any person of the name of Bostwick, except Daniel W. Bostwick, the name of the petitioner.

The petitioner has also furnished the committee with the affidavit of John Ingersol, town clerk of the town of Lodi in said county, and one of the inspectors of elections in said town at the late election; who states, that on the canvass of the votes of said town, on the fifth day of November last, there was found in the proper box, a printed ticket or ballot, endorsed "for members of assembly"; in which the words, letters and parts of letters were found following: Ianiel W. Bostwick on it, with the names of the other candidates for the county offices, viz. one member of assembly, sheriff, clerk, and coroners. All the said ticket or ballot was estimated and counted, except the name of the said I aniel W. Bostwick, which was rejected by the said board of town inspectors, and not allowed to Daniel W. Bostwick in any way or manner; or was the same preserved, or a copy of the same. The said affidavit further states, that the said ballot or ticket appeared to have been torn or worn in such manner, as to have taken off the part of the said printed D, which formed the half circle of the same; which said part of the letter D, would have made the entire name of Daniel W. Bostwick, the petitioner, and who was a candidate for member of assembly in said county, at the last election.

In support of the claim of the petitioner, is also presented to the committee the affidavit of John G. Tubbs, one of the assessors of the town of Junius in said county, and who was one of the inspectors of election in said town at the last annual election; who states, that on canvassing the votes of the said town, on the last day of the election, on the 5th of November, he read in the hearing of the inspectors of said election, and the clerks of the polls, the scattering and abbreviated votes mentioned in the affidavit of Henry Moses, supervisor of said town; and that after reading the same, he passed the said abbreviated votes to the said supervisor. The affidavit further states, that he the said John G. Tubbs distinctly recollects the four abbreviated votes mentioned by the said supervisor, and before described, and that they were of the following description, viz: Two votes for Danl. W. Bostwick, one vote for Daniel Bostwick, and one vote for D. W. Bostwick, all found in the proper box, and endorsed and designated according to the statute regulating elections. The affidavit further states, that in canvassing and estimating the votes of said town, the said votes so abbreviated, were all rejected by the board, and not estimated or counted for the petitioner or any other person; nor were the said ballots or tickets preserved, or a copy of the same, or any account or memorandum made thereof at the said canvass; nor were the same returned to the board of county canvassers, to the clerk of the county, or the clerk of the town of Junius.

The affidavit further states, that there was found in the congress and electoral box, one vote for Daniel W. Bostwick and Erastus Woodworth, which was also rejected, and not estimated, counted or preserved by the said board of town inspectors.

The affidavit also states that there is no other person in the county of Seneca of the name of Bostwick, except the petitioner, who was a candidate for member of assembly at the last election, held in the county of Seneca.

The committee have now presented to the house, the facts and proof of those facts, as alleged on the part of the petitioner, and as set forth in the affidavits accompanying the petition. While upon this part of the subject which has been before the committee, they beg leave to remark, that by the 44th section of the fourth article of the fourth title of the first part of the revised statutes, it is provided that no ballot properly endorsed, found in a different box from that designated by its endorsement, shall be rejected, but shall be counted in the same manner as if found in the proper box: which provision, the committee are compelled to say, was wholly overlooked or disregarded by the inspectors of election in the town of Junius, as far as relates to the ballot found in the congress box, given for member of assembly. It is with regret that the committee are obliged to notice this culpable want of attention to the law under which they acted. By the 52d section of the same article of the statute, it is provided, "that it shall be the duty of the inspectors of elections, to preserve a true copy of all ballots rejected as defective, with the originals attached, and deliver the same to the town clerk, to be filed in his office:" which salutary and necessary provision, as the committee believe, was totally disregarded by the inspectors of the said town of Junius, if the facts stated in the affidavits of three of said inspectors, are to be taken as true. A rigid and strict compliance with the statute in conducting elections, your committee believe to be essential; and the reasons for it are so numerous and manifest, that they need not be suggested, but as a provision to save the trouble of an application to this house, when the objects would be accomplished at the board, if they did their duty.

On the part of the sitting member, who with the petitioner have both been before the committee, and two weeks allowed to procure additional proof as to the validity of his election, he has furnished the committee the following facts and affidavits: First, the affidavit of the town clerk of the town of Junius, who swears that he has searched the office of that town, and that there is no return to that office of rejected votes for members of Assembly on file in said office.

The committee are also furnished with an affidavit on the part of the sitting member, from Samuel Bradley, one of the assessors of the town of Junius, and one of the board of inspectors of said town, and who states the facts that two abbreviated votes were found in the proper box, of the same description as described by Henry Moses, the supervisor of said town, which were rejected by the board, and not allowed or preserved. He further states, that he has no knowledge or does he believe that any other ballot or votes were found in the proper box, that were not counted or estimated to the petitioner. And he further swears that there was no ballot found in the Congress box, which was not counted or estimated for the petitioner, according to the best of his knowledge or belief. The said affidavit further states, that there was a memorandum made of the defective and rejected votes at the time of the canvass and estimate of the votes of said town; but that the same is now lost or mislaid, and that the amount of the votes on said memorandum, was as is stated in his affidavit.

It is further made to appear to the committee by the affidavit of the town clerk of the town of Fayette, in said county, that there is on file in said office, a vote rejected by the board of inspectors in said town, on which is written the name of Sep't. Evans; which vote the committee have allowed to the sitting member, on the ground that it is the common and accepted abbreviation of the name of Septimus, the christian name of the sitting member, and as there is no other person in said county of the name of Evans, except Septimus Evans, one of the sitting members of this house from the county of Seneca.

The facts stated in the affidavit last referred to, are fully corroborated by the affidavit of Enoch Chamberlain, supervisor of the town of Fayette.

The committee have now gone through thus minutely with the proofs and allegations touching the subject before them; and in coming to a conclusion, they will briefly state their unanimous opinion.

1st. The committee have allowed the four votes described in the affidavit of Henry Moses, the supervisor, and as proved by two other of the inspectors of said board.

2d. The vote found in the Congress box should have been allowed to the petitioner; because the 44th section of the election law is imperative upon the board.

3d. The vote of the town of Lodi, which was rejected, should have been allowed to the petitioner.

4th. The committee have allowed to the sitting member one vote which was rejected in the town of Fayette, for the reasons heretofore given, that it was the common and accepted abbreviation of the name.

The result therefore will stand, that by allowing to the petitioner five additional votes, added to the 1558, will make 1563. Allowing to the sitting member one additional vote, will make 1560.

In which opinion your committee believe they are sustained by the rules heretofore adopted by this house upon similar applications, and also by the state canvassers, and by the supreme court. They therefore beg leave to submit the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the seat of the honorable Septimus Evans, the sitting member of this house, be vacated.

Resolved, That the petitioner, Daniel W. Bostwick, be admitted as a member of this house. as duly elected from the county of Seneca, in the place of the honorable Septimus Evans, the sitting member.

Ordered, That the said report and resolutions be committed to a committee of the whole house.

Ordered, That the usual number of copies of the said report be printed for the use of the legislature.

Mr. Curtiss, from the select committee, to which was referred the petition of sundry inhabitants of the counties of Onondaga and Cortland, praying for an act of incorporation for the purpose of constructing a rail-road from the town of Salina in the county of Onondaga, to the navigable waters of the Susquehannah river, reported:

That it is represented by the petitioners, and satisfactorily appears to the committee, to be of vast importance to the state, and of infinite interest to the petitioners, that the means should be increased and improved, and the expense of transportation lessened, between the Onondaga lake and the navigable waters of the Susquehannah river. The committee would remark, that a communication between the great western canal and the navigable waters of said river, is a subject which has for years agitated the public mind, and has been looked for with the most earnest solicitude; and that no route has been so generally desired, or excited public attention so much, as that which leads from the great salt manufactories, south, through the valleys, to the banks of the Susquehannah.

It appears to the committee, that it is a subject worthy the attention of the legislature, and of infinite importance to the petitioners and to the state generally, that a communication, as direct as possible, should be opened between the great salt manufactories in Onondaga and those inexhaustible mines of coal bordering on the Susquehannah river.

The contemplated rail-road will be about seventy miles in length, through a rich country, containing a dense population, and many healthy and flourishing villages. The committee would further remark, that the petitioners ask not that the golden arm of the treasury should be extended to them, but only desire that they may be permitted to construct a rail-road with their own means.

The committee would further remark, that from the knowledge they have of the respectability, enterprise and means of the petitioners, they have no hesitation in expressing a firm belief, that if a charter be granted, the necessary funds will be raised, and the road completed. And the committee, considering that a work of such vast importance can be accomplished without the risk of any loss, and without any expense to the state, earnestly recommend that the prayer of the petitioners, for an act of incorporation, be granted. They have therefore prepared a bill, and directed their chairman to ask leave to introduce the same.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Curtiss, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to incorporate the Salina and Susquehannah rail-road company;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Ordered, That the usual number of copies of the said bill and report be printed for the use of the legislature.

Mr. W. Hall, from the committee on engrossed bills, reported, that they have examined the engrossed bill entitled "An act for the relief of Cornelius Higgins," and the engrossed bill entitled "An act for the relief of the heirs of Christian Guthrie;" and find the said bills severally correctly engrossed.

Thereupon,

A message from the Governor, delivered by his private secretary, was read, in the words following, to wit:

TO THE ASSEMBLY.

GENTLEMEN,

In my communication to the Legislature at the opening of the session, I alluded briefly to the outlines of a plan suggested to me relative to the renewal of bank charters. Understanding that it was the general expectation, that a full development of its details would be laid before you by me, I have requested its author to furnish me with a more ample statement of his views; and have now the honor to transmit the communication which I have received from him.

Although this plan is of a character somewhat novel, yet as connected with the most important object of your present duties, it is at least worthy of your deliberate attention. The necessarily imperfect notice taken of the subject in my former communication, has called forth, as I anticipated, expressions of disapprobation from those whose opinions are entitled to much respect. Imperfect as that notice was, it has however been sufficient to excite inquiry into its merits, and lead to favorable views of it on the part of several well informed and capable judges. It was reasonable to expect objections from those who so much misapprehended the proposed measure, as to believe that it designed to cast on solvent banks an immediate and unqualified responsibility for all those that might become insolvent: It will now be seen that such is not the case—Instead of that immediate, undefined and unlimited responsibility, it is proposed to substitute for the payment of a gross sum to the state, which has sometimes been exacted as a consideration for the exclusive privilege granted, (and which is still advocated by several,) the creation of a permanent fund, to be held as a security against all losses which our citizens may hereafter sustain through the failure of banks. That fund is to be raised gradually, and in a manner little burthensome to the banks; to be at all times kept good by them, and instead of going into the public treasury for the general benefit, is to be applied to the protection from actual loss of those of our constituents who would otherwise suffer by the failure of banks improvidently chartered by the state, or unskilfully managed by those to whom they were so granted; and whose paper, in the unavoidable state of our currency, our citizens can hardly be said to have the option to take or refuse—To this is added a system of supervision, which if fairly carried into effect, cannot fail, it would seem, to protect the contributing banks against further calls, to preserve the fund, and to give our paper currency the utmost credit and stability. That the charters of the sound portion of the existing banks ought to be renewed, appears, so far as the feelings and wishes of our constituents can be ascertained, to be the prevailing opinion. If you should participate in that sentiment, the questions that will necessarily arise, will be, whether such extension should be without new conditions; and if not, then whether the plan now proposed, or some other and better one, shall be adopted—questions, which are properly, and may safely, be left to the wisdom and justice of the legislature. All that is asked for the plan now proposed, is your full and unbiassed consideration—If it should not be approved, the suggestion of it will not have been entirely useless: It has already assisted, and will probably further assist, to give a right direction to the public mind on a very important subject, by causing the establishment of banks and their regulation to be regarded as a matter of deep public concern, from their effects upon the great body of the people, and not merely as grants made for local accommodation, or to promote the individual interests of applicants and stockholders.

It will be seen that the author has added some reflections touching the propriety of an investment of their capital by the banks, and a change in the nature and form of their discounts. His views in that respect, have been now for the first time communicated to me, and were not referred to in my message at the commencement of the session. They are expressed with great force and perspicuity; and I lay them before you, in the belief that any thing calculated to throw light on a subject of such deep interest, is worthy of your consideration.

MARTIN VAN BUREN.

Albany, January 26, 1829.

To His Excellency Martin Van Buren,
Governor of the State of New-York.

SIR,

In compliance with your request, I have prepared a more full exposition of the plan, of which I had the honor to submit to you the outlines, for placing the banking operations of the state under a system of regulations calculated to produce the good management of the banks, secure the public against loss by their failure, and furnish a sound and well regulated currency, adequate to the necessities of this great and highly commercial state. It is my decided opinion, supported by that of many gentlemen of intelligence and extensive experience, that the principles upon which it is founded, if judiciously applied and faithfully executed, cannot fail to remedy the evils growing out of the present system, and produce much good to the community. Conceived and matured in retirement, with the sole view to correct those evils of which I have long been conscious, this system interferes with the interests and policy of the existing banks, where they interfere with the public good, and appeals for support to the good sense and patriotism of an impartial and discerning public. It is offered, in the hope that it may be the means of producing great and lasting benefits to my native state.

Accept, Sir, my best wishes for your health and prosperity.

I remain, your most obedient servant,

JOSHUA FORMAN.

Albany, January 24, 1829.

PLAN, &c.

The convenience of bank notes as a circulating medium, the facility and economy with which they may be increased to answer the demands of business, with the fashion of the age of extending business by credit, have rendered bank accommodations necessary to every seat of commerce. Under the influence of this necessity, our legislature has from time to time incorporated banks, as the increase of business and the advance of commerce required, until we have already about forty banks in operation; and from the increasing commerce of New-York, and the new field of business opened along the line of the canals, their number and amount of capital must be essentially increased, before every place of considerable trade shall be accommodated with bank facilities proportioned to its business.

Each of these banks is invested with the right of making bills to pass as money in the ordinary transaction of business, with no other regulation than certain restrictions in its charter, which may or may not be regarded, and no other security for the payment of those bills, than the corporate property of the company—each independent of, and sometimes in hostility to, the others. The legislature could not foresee the immense increase of business, and consequent multiplication of banks: It is therefore nowise strange, that they did not from the beginning adopt any system of regulations applicable to the present state of things. It is from experience we have been taught the result of such an organization—how banks could be got into operation with fictitious capitals, and flood the community with paper of no intrinsic value—how banks got up by well meaning men, could be bought in by knaves, who, after circulating three or four times the amount of paper they paid for them, could withdraw what capital there was, and leave the public to bear the loss—how, when most of the capital of a bank had been lost by its officers in wild speculations, its credit could be kept up by making the usual dividends, until the knowing ones had sold out, and nothing be left to pay its notes and deposits—and how, when banks had pushed their discounts and accommodations to a most unwarrantable length, from the desire of making large profits, they have, on a change of times, so suddenly and violently called in their demands, as to cause the ruin of multitudes of enterprising men, and furnished opportunities to dishonest ones, under cover of the general distress, to screen their property, and rid themselves of their debts; thus discouraging regular business, encouraging adventurous speculation, and corrupting the morals of the mercantile public to the very core: And great as has been the evil and loss from the failure of banks, they dwindle into insignificance, compared with the public injury occasioned by the irregular and injudicious management of the solvent banks.

It was early discovered by intelligent men, that this mode was defective; and about twenty years since, when the older banks were re-incorporated, they were all limited to about the same time, with a view, that at their re-incorporation, some general system of regulation might be adopted, which should afford a better security for the paper issued, and ensure a better management of their affairs. With the same view, many after incorporated banks were limited to about the same time. There was a project then stated, of condensing the incorporated bank capital of the state into one large bank, with branches in places where they were necessary, in the manner of the United States Bank; which, as the whole capital would have been answerable for all the paper issued, promised the desired security; and the several branches being under the control of the mother bank, would have been confined to such regulations as were imposed by them: Yet as it would have effectually destroyed the separate patronage, freedom of action, and individual advantage or loss from good or bad management of the several branches, it never met the general approbation of the public.

Time has rolled on, and exhibited many sad evidences of the effects of our present banking system. The public, stung by repeated losses, have demanded some better regulations in the business, and better security for the payment of the paper issued. The legislature, in obedience to their wishes, have enacted many new regulations, to apply to after re-incorporated or newly incorporated banks; and searching for the security required, have adopted the plan of making the directors and stockholders personally liable for the debts of the bank. Yet the objection still remains, that the regulations are without the means of enforcing them—that they may and will be evaded by unprincipled men; and when the public have suffered damage by them, it is but a poor consolation that they may be punished, if they can be found. And as to making a security from the personal liability of the directors and stockholders, it is objected to by the existing banks, and in which many intelligent men concur, that it is calculated to increase the evil complained of—that under such a system, although some banks, bought up by individuals, or by a number of men bound to each other by a private agreement, could and would be safely and profitably conducted as private partnerships, yet in banks where the direction depended on the floating circulation of the stock, every prudent man and sound capitalist would, as soon as possible, withdraw from a business in which the risque was altogether disproportioned to the chances of profit, where he might be ruined, against his best efforts for the good of the institution, by the mismanagement of others. The ownership and management of such banks would soon come into the hands of needy adventurous men, who having little to lose, incurred little risque by their responsibility. From the great number of our banks, failures would be frequent; and little or no security being found from the liability of the men, the public would lose all confidence in bank paper.

In this state of things, the time has arrived when the great body of the existing banks must be re-incorporated; or in calling in their demands, to be ready to close their concerns at the expiration of their charters, a very general and distressing embarrassment would be produced through all classes of the community. From this legislature we must therefore expect the final establishment of a banking system for many years to come, the effects of which will be felt by succeeding ages. The object to be attained, is of incalculable importance to the prosperity, happiness, and moral character of this highly commercial and growing state—to secure them a sound, well regulated currency, which shall not only be in the hands of the receiver of the value it purports to be, but shall be so adapted to the necessities of business, as to insure to regular, well directed business, the support and protection necessary to preserve its well earned profits, and depress and restrain that adventurous, speculating business, which causes those convulsions in the money market, baffling all calculation, and defeating the best arranged plans of business. The task is an arduous one. To have succeeded in accomplishing what so many legislatures have attempted, and been most wofully disappointed, would at once give to our state as high a credit and respectability in her monied concerns, as she stands pre-eminent in commercial rank among the states of the Union, and redound to the lasting honor of the men whose good sense had selected and adopted the system.

Presuming that various plans would be suggested, I was induced, from principles and opinions long since discerned and entertained, to digest a system for effecting this object, and communicated the outlines of it to His Excellency the Governor. As it has received his favorable consideration, and been noticed in his message to the Legislature, I am the more confirmed in the opinion I entertained of its utility, (before I had communicated with any one on the subject,) and shall with more confidence explain its leading features, with my views of their bearing and consequences. Before going into the details of the plan, I wish to state certain propositions on which they are founded, to prevent their repetition in the course of this statement.

1. The intrinsic value of an article is regulated by the amount of skill and labor necessary to produce it; the actual or marketable value, by the demand for use and the quantity in market, or the price in countries to which it is to be exported; the speculative value is produced by competition, in view of some anticipated demand at home or abroad.

2. The amount of currency necessary for the transaction of business, must therefore depend upon, and be regulated by the value of the commodities of the country in market; and by the immutable laws of commerce, and the nature of things, will increase and diminish with it.

3. If part of this circulation is paper and part specie, the whole amount will be exactly the same as if the whole was specie, so long as it is convertible into specie, and is secured by a substantial capital to guarantee its eventual payment.

4. That portion of the circulation which can safely be paper, it is the province of banks to supply, by the loan of their credit; and from this they derive their legitimate profits. As it is furnished at a cheap rate, the nation save the cost, interest, wear, and waste of some 40,000,000 of metallic currency.

5. So long as this is kept in just proportion to the necessities of business, is convertible at all times into specie, and secured by the capital of the banks and the property of their debtors, it is in every respect as good as a specie circulation.

6. When this currency becomes too abundant, (and the desire of making large profits too often leads those intrusted with its distribution, to outstrip the line of propriety,) the first effect is to raise the price of commodities by competition in the market, which would equally be produced by a superabundant metallic circulation; but as the diffusion of gold and silver is regulated by the laws of commerce over the world, and costs so much to own and possess it, its superabundance is a case of more rare occurrence.

7. If this rise of commodities is such that they can no longer be exported with profit, the specie in the country is sent abroad to pay debts and buy merchandize.

8. In this state of the business, sales come to a stand; and the merchant having his commodities on hand unsold, is unable to pay his note given for them: The circulation, ever moving as the atmosphere, not being kept out by the necessities of business, flows in upon the banks—they press their debtors; those commodities bought at speculating prices, must then be sold below their real value, to pay the debt. Commodities being thus reduced below their marketable value, a brisk exportation takes place: The drain of specie is stopped; by degrees, the ordinary importation of specie fills up the deficit occasioned by its exportation; prices rise to their proper level, and the sun of prosperity again beams upon the country.

9. As it is thus evident that banks have powers committed to them so deeply affecting the interest of community, they ought to be considered and treated as public institutions, intended as much for the public good, as the profit of the stockholders; and while they are allowed such latitude as may enable them, with good management, to make profits as good or better than any other business of equal risque, they ought to be put under such regulations as to prevent their injuring that community, for whose benefit they were instituted.

For this purpose, I propose,

1st. A set of regulations to insure a sound capital to each bank at starting; to keep it good and available; to limit their loans and discounts to an amount, to which it is safe for them to extend their credit; to prevent their issuing any bills payable otherwise than on demand, and in the lawful coin of the country, and compel their regular payment when demanded; to prevent the banks and their officers speculating upon the depreciation of their paper, and making transfers of their effects in anticipation of insolvency, to give a preference to their officers or their friends, or to defraud its creditors.

2d. As no mechanism can be so arranged as long to keep in order, without being occasionally adjusted; much less a moral machinery, in which human passions and frailties have so great an influence; I propose a board of commissioners, chosen by all the banks, voting according to capital, or appointed by the state, or part by the banks and part by the state, whose constant business it shall be, thoroughly, firmly, but confidentially, to inspect the concerns of all the banks; see that they are kept within the prescribed regulations; concert measures for the good of all; give such information to each, as shall be necessary to prevent extravagant issues at times when the monied operations of the country are like to be embarrassed—and thus, as far as possible, prevent their failure. And whenever they shall find any bank violating those essential provisions for public safety, or so embarrassed in their concerns as to require them to be closed for the security of the public, and the other banks interested, to be invested with extensive powers to secure the property of such bank from being wasted or embezzled. And on the rendering of a judgment of insolvency against it, by a chancellor or judge, to have its affairs settled by trustees under their direction—its effects collected and converted into money, and its debts ascertained and certified—and when so ascertained, paid by the commissioners from the effects of the bank, and the fund hereafter mentioned. The commissioners to be removable by the Governor, for neglect of duty, or misconduct, on the application of a majority of the banks in interest.

3d. As the banks have, by their charters, and the operation of the law to prevent private banking, the exclusive right of furnishing a paper currency for the citizens of the state, and thus exercise a quasi right of sovereignty, equivalent to coining, by which they derive profits beyond the interest of their capital, it is but a just consideration for the state to exact from them a guarantee for the goodness of that paper. I therefore propose a fund to be raised from an annual payment by all the banks according to capital, to be applied to the payment of the debts of such banks as shall fail, to go on accumulating until it shall amount to $500,000 or $1,000,000, when the annual payments are to be omitted, until it is reduced by the payment of the debts of insolvent banks, below that sum, when it is to be immediately replenished by calling in so many arrear instalments as shall raise it to that amount. This fund to be held by the commissioners as a corporation, and invested in safe public stocks, or loans on such stocks; and in case the banks have the election of the commissioners, that they be accountable in like proportion for any loss to the fund, by the fraud or mismanagement of the commissioners; and in either case, the fund to remain the property of the banks, and each entitled to its share pro rata on the dissolution or expiration of the term.

4th. To render the system effectual, it ought, as far as possible, be made universal; and as the only mode to render it so, I propose, that as a measure of state policy, such of the charters of banks about to expire, now in good credit, as shall be thought expedient, be continued for a given period. say twenty years, subject to these regulations, and on condition that they shall consent to be subject to their operation from some early day, say the first Monday of May next. That all the charters in which the Legislature, with a wise forecast, have reserved the right to amend, shall be continued to the same time, and these regulations made amendments to their respective charters, to take effect from said first Monday of May next. And that as it is incompatible with the public interest, for any corporations to exercise the important power of making a paper currency, without being subject to the salutary regulations necessary for the public safety; I propose, that if the several incorporations possessing banking powers, and unlimited in duration, shall consent to be subject to the provisions of the system adopted, they shall enjoy the same exemptions and benefits as the other banks; but otherwise be taxed an amount annually, equal to the annual contribution of the other banks, in proportion to their capital, for the benefit of said fund; and their paper, in case of failure, be a charge upon the fund, in the same manner as that of other institutions.

5th. As an inducement for the banks to accept the provisions of the system—that the state stipulate with those accepting its provisions in the nature of a contract, that they will re-incorporate no banks not included in the general act—or being included, shall not accept its provisions before said first Monday of May next—they will incorporate no new bank which shall not be subject to the provisions of this system, in conjunction with those so accepting them, during the term of their re-incorporation.

That in every new bank incorporated during said term, the said commissioners shall be commissioners to receive the subscriptions to its stock, and to distribute the same among the subscribers in such manner "as in their opinion will best promote the interest of the place where located, and the permanent good of the institution." That no such new bank shall go into operation, until the said commissioners shall certify that the capital required by law is actually and in good faith paid in, and such certificate filed in the office of the secretary of state.

That they will exact no bonus or onerous duty from any new bank, calculated to weaken its capital or embarrass its operations.

And as it appears that the average dividends of the banks in New-York for several years have not exceeded five per cent per annum, and the imposition of so large an annual contribution to the safety fund as would be desirable to render it an effectual security, would render it the interest of the stockholders to close their concerns, and put out their money at legal interest. The banks coming under these regulations, to be exempted from the operation of the law imposing a tax upon banks, leaving the stockholders liable to be taxed for their stocks as before the passage of that law, and the income of the fund be paid to the treasurer of the state for the use of the state, or to be distributed to the counties in the proportions they are now entitled to the tax, as the legislature shall see fit; so that the principal of the amount raised from the banks may be applied to the fulfilment of their engagement with the public, and the income thereof, after deducting the expenses of the commission, for the uses to which the present tax is appropriated.

6th. The wilful loaning or discounting beyond the limit set by law, the making false reports of the state of their concerns, neglecting for more than three months to pay their annual payment to said fund when required, having lost on the face of their books more than one half their capital according to the rules prescribed for estimating it, or suspending the payment of their bills in specie for more than sixty days, or either of them, to be adjudged an act of insolvency, and the affairs of such banks to be closed as before mentioned. An officer of a bank making false returns, false entries in the books of the bank, exhibiting false papers as evidence of indebtedness to the bank, for the purpose of deceiving the commissioners as to the true situation of the bank, to be guilty of felony, and punished as for forgery.

By the application of these provisions, the whole body of banks would constitute a kind of community something after the model of our federal union, in which each in its proper sphere would have the same freedom of action, separate patronage and individual benefit or loss from good or bad management, they now possess—with a supervision over the whole, as perfect and more beneficial for the public than that of a general bank over its branches—and a common fund for the common security, which, under the operation of the principle of inspection to prevent mismanagement, and the power to secure the property of the failing banks before mismanagement has progressed to its consummation, total ruin, and the wreck of its property has been hypothecated and made way with for the benefit of the directors and their friends—is on the whole a more ample security to the public than that of a general bank with branches, where, in case the general direction misjudged, they might ruin the whole concern; but under this system, like the union of the states, the right of self government in each, constitutes the security of the whole. If occasionally a bank should make bad calculations, they would be kept in check by the others, now more interested in their welfare than before; and if they should succeed in breaking through all restraints, and consummate their ruin, the losses would be comparatively small, and within the means of the fund to meet them; and at all events, although not sufficient to cover every possible loss, it will be acknowledged on all hands, is not only more available, but of more intrinsic value than the personal responsibility of the directors and stockholders, for the double reason that the property of persons rendered liable for the defaults of others, is rarely found to answer the execution, and that few who had any thing would be found in situations to be made liable.

The propriety of making the banks liable for each other, was suggested by the regulations of the Hong merchants in Canton, where a number of men, each acting separately, have, by the grant of the government, the exclusive right of trading with foreigners, and are all made liable for the debts of each in case of failure. The case of our banks is very similar; they enjoy in common the exclusive right of making a paper currency for the people of the state, and by the same rule should in common be answerable for that paper. This abstractly just principle, which has stood the test of experience for seventy years, and under which the bond of a Hong merchant has acquired a credit over the whole world, not exceeded by that of any other security, modified and adapted to the milder features of our republican institutions, constitutes the basis of this system.

As there has grown up with the banks now in good standing, a body of men capable of managing their concerns, in whom the public have confidence, and who are conversant with the demands of the various subjects of industry and business in the state; this system, placing them under proper regulations in their present form, must not only have a preference over that of a general bank with branches, the success of which must depend upon the selection of suitable men not only for the principal bank, but for all its branches, because the experience of their present managers is a pledge to the public of their avoiding those shoals and quicksands upon which most new directions get stranded, and the institutions under their management injured—but also on account of the derangement of business which must be produced by the calling in the funds of the present banks, and placing them under new management, before they would find their way through new channels, again to set in motion the numerous wheels of business through the country.

The stipulations on the part of the state are a necessary guarantee to those banks which shall submit to these onerous provisions, that no old insolvent bank or new one with a fictitious capital shall be added to their fraternity to drain their fund—and the penalties on the banks are a just punishment upon the stockholders for employing unprincipled or incompetent men—and considering the progressive nature of vice, and that the men chosen to such offices are generally men of good habits and character at starting, it can scarcely happen but the penalties against the officers must prevent those first steps in error which lead to the gross villainy the acts mentioned imply. The superiority of this inspection over a return made on oath as a mean of ascertaining the state of a bank, or to prevent its mismanagement, will be readily perceived—for a man must be insane to render a false return to the commissioners under the penalty of state prison, when the means of detection were at hand, and in all probability the truth would come to light in a few hours from the examination making: when in a return to an officer at a distance, to whom the law has not assigned the duty of ascertaining its truth, the remote chance of detection offers a great temptation to prevarication and concealment if not direct false swearing, by unprincipled men.

I will now suggest such answers as have occurred to me, to the objections which have or are most likely to be made to the system.

Objection 1st. It is objected by the rich, stable banks, who only wish to be left to go on with a prosperous business, that it imposes an onerous obligation for the benefit of minor and worse managed banks.

Answer. It is not for the benefit of those banks, but a guarantee to the public against loss by such banks, and is the just price of the rights they enjoy by the grant of the state. The conviction that something was due to the public for the exclusive right of making a paper currency, caused the exaction of a bonus on the incorporation of many banks, and the imposition on others of onerous duties in favor of individuals, to reward real or imaginary services, thereby essentially injuring the after usefulness of those institutions. Under this plan, that consideration, instead of being taken from the bank, and in case of failure, so far increasing the public loss, is made the security of the public from loss.

Objection 2nd. It may be objected by some banks, whose affairs have been managed for the benefit of a few, and whose funds are often drawn out in bold speculations, that the inspection proposed is too inquisitorial.

Answer. I have before said that banks are properly public institutions, established for the public good, as well as individual profit. Most of the evils experienced from banks have arisen from overlooking this principle, and granting bank charters to particular men, instead of locating them as accommodations to the business of particular places, in which the real capital of the place might be consolidated, and furnish the basis of a credit for the transaction of its business. The persons obtaining the charters have generally so managed, as to get their friends appointed commissioners, and the stock distributed to their minds, to give them the control of the bank. They then either drew out its funds at pleasure, for their own speculations, or sold out their stock at an advance to men who wished to use the machine for profit, or enrich themselves by its ruin. It is from this class of banks the greatest losses have been sustained, and such of them as still remain without having the stock generally diffused, are among those institutions where the public good requires the inspection most.

Objection 3d. By the banks in whose charters the power of amendment is reserved—That as such regulations were not contemplated at the time of the grant, they are in the nature of ex post facto laws, and ought not to be enforced upon them during their present term.

Answer. The conviction that there was a radical defect in the old system, caused the reservation of a power to amend their charters, and it comes with an ill grace from men who have gone into operation under a charter with such reservation, now to object to its exercise for the public safety, at the time so long looked to, for a general revision of the system. If it was not to remain a mere dead letter, there could not occur a possible occasion more appropriate for the exercise of this power than the present, when the general voice of the public calls for better regulations upon banks, and better security for their paper.

Objection 4th. By the institutions exercising banking powers, unlimited in duration and without power of amendment reserved—That it would be unjust and arbitrary to tax them for the insurance of their paper.

Answer. Yet on general principles, as the state has a control over its citizens, to compel each so to exercise his rights as not to injure others; and experience has shewn the danger of permitting corporations to issue bills with no better security than their corporate property; there can be little doubt they have the power, and much less of the propriety of enforcing by tax, a contribution to the safety fund, from such of them as shall not, from a sense of justice and acquiescence to the public will, voluntarily subject themselves to the provisions of the system.

Objection 5th. By the city banks—That if this security is given to the paper issued, the country banks will be enabled to keep out a larger amount of paper, and engross the circulation of the city with a paper under par there.

Answer. The regular current of business does now, and must continue to carry the paper issued in the country, to the city: Yet as the products of the country are again sold in the city, a quantity of city paper must be carried into the country, and find its way into the country banks, to meet their paper when returned: And when the amount issued is limited by the restrictions on their loans and discounts as proposed, and an increased value and credit given to it by this system, their paper will be used in payments, and taken out of circulation, and the danger of its accumulation removed. I would here further add, that if the banks were prohibited from issuing notes under five dollars, as has been done in Virginia, Maryland and Pennsylvania, and the small bills of other states prohibited, so that specie would be called into use for change and all small transactions, the circulation of each bank would be confined to its proper sphere. And this ought to be done, that in case of reducing the circulation, the distress would not be so great by the amount of specie thus held in circulation; nor, in case of their failure, fall so hard upon that class of men, who, having less than five dollars, would have it in specie. But also as specie is the nearest standard measure we possess of the value of commodities, and paper only retains its value while it is readily convertible into specie, it is highly important that a competent portion of specie should be kept in circulation through the country, that the relative value of paper might be constantly tested by it. For whenever such an over issue of paper has been made that its circulation cannot be kept up, and there begins to be a call for and premium on specie, it will be evident to all that a too abundant circulation has been produced, and the consequent exportation of specie already commenced.

Objection 6th. By the country banks—That the restriction of their loans and discounts will essentially reduce the profits of their business, and ought not to be enforced on those who conduct their business well, because others have mismanaged and failed.

Answer. Under this limitation, they may, with good conduct, make as much, after paying the expenses of management, as they have any right to claim: And as they risque as much on the capital as is safe in the average of times, and more than is prudent for an individual, public safety requires them to be limited to the line of prudence; for although an able board of directors might fearlessly launch further from shore, with full confidence of making a profitable return, a change of directors might place men at helm, who, from unskilfulness, would founder the ship in the first storm. Besides, when a safe system of banking operations shall be settled, and the legislature relieved from the panic apprehension from banks, shall have incorporated banks at the places, and to the amount they are now needed, there will be neither the inducement nor the opportunity of extending their business as far as they now do.

Objection 7th. By cautious men, and the existing banks—That under such a system, the apprehension from banks being removed, they would be multiplied in number and amount beyond what is needed for public accommodation, the amount of dividends and the value of stocks reduced, and the business destroyed by competition.

Answer. As by this system the object of getting bank charters for speculation is removed, there is little probability the legislature will grant banks where they do not believe there is legitimate business, or to a greater amount than they judge useful for the business of the place. Should they err on this point, as no such bank can go into operation until its capital is paid in, few men that had money would embark it in a bank of such doubtful utility. If got into operation, as it is with banks as with most other business, those best conducted would make the best dividends, and stand highest in the stock market; while those badly located or badly managed, would soon fall into the hands of the commissioners, to be wound up, or making dividends much less than legal interest, would be closed by the stockholders. But it is beyond a doubt, that as public institutions under good regulations, there would be no danger to the public, but an increased security from an increase of banks, and consequently of capital, on which the given amount of paper circulation used in the business of a particular district is based. For it cannot be denied, that since the vast increase of business along the line of the canal, without a proportionate increase of banks, those in the vicinity have been constrained to enlarge their business to a fearful amount, to accommodate the necessities of business, jeopardizing their very existence in case of a sudden fall in the price of the great staples of that section of that country.

Objection 8th. Objection has been made to the election of commissioners by the banks, and placing the fund in their hands, as less safe than in that of the state; and to this opinion, his excellency the Governor seems to incline in the notice taken of the project in his message.

Answer. With all deference to his better judgment, having given more attention to the subject, I am still of the opinion that the plan first proposed is decidedly preferable. Experience has shown it best for government to interfere as little as possible with the concerns of banks, except in placing them under proper regulations, leaving them with the keen sightedness of self interest to manage their own concerns. In this case, placing this fund in the hands of the commissioners as a corporation to keep it invested safely, making the banks security for the good conduct of the commissioners chosen by them, as a pledge of their choosing men above all suspicion, it could not fail to be at all times an available fund at the moment needed. But should this fund come into the treasury of the state, although its credit is now good, and money could be raised at a moment's warning on its stock; yet should some future legislature, under the influence of that spirit of improvement which is abroad in the land, and has in some parts of the Union risen almost to an epidemic madness, undertake at the public expense a number of those projected improvements, and a greater amount of stock be thrown into market by this state, and the others now embarking deeply in such enterprises, than the surplus capital of the country can absorb; for it is with the public as with an individual, they cannot safely expend in improvements much beyond their spare capital, without producing embarrassment; a reaction would take place, stocks fall in the market, and a state of things might arise in which, should a considerable call be made on this fund, and such a crisis would be likely of itself to produce bank failures, that resort must be had to legislation to raise the money necessary; and a delay take place injurious to the creditors of the banks failed, and discreditable to the system. Even the possession of such a fund must furnish a temptation to embark in some such project, to make a profitable employment of the money.

Without attempting answers to all the objections which interest and ingenuity may devise to the plan proposed, I readily admit that I do not consider it perfect for all the purposes attainable by legal provision; but one calculated to put under regulation the existing institutions; as far as possible to secure the public from loss by their failure, and maintain a well regulated currency, compatible with the present state of things, and their established modes of business, and as favorable for the public as there is any reason to expect can now be enforced upon them.

To render the system perfect for both those purposes, two further regulations are necessary, interfering at once with the present modes of business, and the commonly received opinions on the subject of banking.

1st. To confine the banks to discounting business paper to fall due at short periods, to be paid at maturity, and without renewals promised or expected.

2nd. To compel them to invest their capital in safe public stocks, or put it out on bonds and mortgages upon productive real estate of double the value, for long periods on interest, and not to employ it in their ordinary business.

However singular this plan may appear to many, it is demonstrable that by this mode, and this only, can a circulation be maintained exactly adapted to the necessities of business, and that the great evils experienced in this and other states, from an irregular currency, have originated from a violation of those rules. As it is impossible from the present situation of the existing banks that these regulations could now be applied to them, it might seem useless to mention the subject at all: but having volunteered advice, I feel bound to state the whole case, and provide an adequate remedy; and in the hope that correct principles being stated and discussed at a time when the public attention is alive to the subject, they may be applied in the incorporation of new banks, and provision made, that when experience, under our own eyes, has shown their beneficial operation, they may be gradually applied to the existing ones.

The profits of banking are derived from the use of their credit, by the banks in discounting notes, whether in the shape of bills, or credits on their books.— So far as capital is used, it is interest and not profits.

The amount of that credit which can be kept in use without creating a redundant circulation, is exactly the amount necessary for the transaction of business, and is regulated by the value of the commodities in market at the time

The use of their credit to this amount may be counted upon as a fund, upon which to operate with as much certainty, as if they had the specie in their vaults to redeem every bill, so long as their capital is sound, and public confidence in it undiminished.

It therefore results as a consequence, that the use of their capital, in the ordinary business of banking, is unnecessary, as they might do all with their credit, which can be done with capital and credit both, within the amount required for the transaction of business, and not producing a redundant circulation and a consequent increased demand. In this and the preceding propositions, I speak of the banks as a collective body, in which the operations of all have the same effect as if done by one.

It reduces their profits by an amount equal to the interest of that amount of capital employed, where credit might have been used, and which has displaced so much credit; for it is manifest if their capital had been invested or loaned, drawing interest, and the same business done on credit, the whole receipts would have been so much greater.

If such use of their capital is both unnecessary and unprofitable, it is an improper risque of the fund, on which their credit is based, when it might always be invested or loaned to be equally productive, without risque or loss. The bank exchanges its credit for the notes discounted, and the difference is profits, which is the proper fund to bear the losses sustained.

The practice of using their capital in their discounts is liable, and almost without exception, has produced losses of capital, and injury to their credit—by causing them when in the recess of business, their funds are thrown on their hands and little business paper offered, for the sake of keeping it on interest, and insuring the ordinary dividend, to make loans on accommodation paper, for enterprizes less certain of success, and on securities less substantial than they ought, or would in good business times; many of which, instead of being in a state to be called in, require the advance of part of their credit, with a view to render them secure, when the revival of business requires its use, and sometimes to the exclusion of the best business paper. By which means they gradually get a large amount of capital out, upon slow, doubtful debts, which cannot aid them in time of necessity, and constitute a poor security for their credit in use. Whereas, had they commenced under these rules, their capital would have been safely invested in productive stocks, or loaned on the best securities to merchants, to constitute their capital in trade, to mechanics and manufacturers to set up their business, or to farmers to pay for or improve their farms, for such time as to enable them to bring their plans of business or improvement to maturity, and repay the money from the profits, without being liable to have them broken up and defeated by an unexpected call of the funds, and themselves and their endorsers ruined by the operation.

But the paramount evil of this mode of using capital, is its constant tendency to create a redundant circulation, produce speculation and its consequent evils—Having their capital on hand in the ebb of business, and desirous of making their usual profits, money is let into circulation too freely, and through other channels than the regular course of business, and to other than business men, who by having money in their hands, acquired too easily to appreciate its value or know its proper use, are tempted to embark it in speculations: Sales consequently become brisk, and the banks, whose injudicious management first lit the fire, now furnish fuel for the flame, by discounting the business notes created, and new accommodation notes, until all within its influence have entangled themselves, and all those however remote from the scene, whom the ties of friendship or blood could influence to become their endorsers, as far as the banks dare credit them. As the property bought is run much above its marketable value, and they can no longer hold it on speculation, the bubble bursts—it is then frequently sold so much below its cost as to take all they are worth, and ruin their endorsers, to pay the difference. Thus the consequences of mercantile speculation are diffused through the whole community, breaking down and destroying families who might otherwise have passed through life with competence and respectability. While under these rules the banks having their capital producing income, and confined to discounting business paper, would more readily submit to have their discounts decline with the decline of business; no more money would come into circulation than the business doing called out, to produce speculation; and should a flattering prospect of demand abroad produce it, it would be in the line of business; the notes discounted would generally be those of the buyers, endorsed by the sellers; the punishment of overtrading would fall only on those concerned, and exactly in proportion to their participation in it.

A bank thus organized, having its capital invested or secured, drawing interest, and confining itself to the discounting of business paper—like a well adjusted safety gate on a canal, which regulates the discharge according to the influx of water, would always regulate their issues to their receipts, and command their business instead of suffering it to get the command of them. Its officers would have only to see that the notes discounted were safe, and that the bills receiveable covered the bills payable, and all would be well, leaving the deposits and profits on hand to cover accidental variations: and should these rules be made universal, with the supervision of the commissioners, to prevent losses by fraud and gross ignorance, and by the experience acquired of the maximum and minimum of circulation, keeping all within proper bounds, and the safety fund to prevent panic runs and pay real losses, the banking interest of the state would constitute an organization as perfect in its combinations, safe in its operations, and beneficial in its effects, as it is possible for any moral machinery to be—capable of producing all the good ever contemplated from banks by furnishing a circulation exactly adapted to the necessities of business at all times, and preventing all the evils their injudicious management has produced; and from their amount, and the important position they hold with respect to commerce of the Union, might, without doubt, maintain a sound healthy circulation here, however the injudicious management of the banks in other states might convulse their money market, or depreciate their currency.

The objections to this mode of banking arise from false theories of circulation entertained by many, covering with a cloud of mystery the operations of the discount room, and the inherent love of power and patronage in the directors and officers of banks. In the present mode, they have the power of calling through their hands, if at their call it could be raised and paid, the whole amount of the debts due them, in the course of ninety days, amounting to from twenty-five to thirty millions of dollars in this state, and exceeding its whole circulation. This power, which in ordinary times, like the energies of the sleeping volcano, seem scarcely to be felt, are exerted with tremendous effect, in times of reducing the circulation from a redundant to an ordinary one—crushing whom they please, and sparing those only who find favor in their eyes. This monstrous power is too arbitrary in its character, too degrading to the body upon which it is exercised, and demoralizing in its effects upon society, to be tolerated in a land of freedom, unless it shall be found imperiously necessary to prevent a greater evil, or obtain a paramount good; both of which I deny altogether.

They allege, that if the banks were not to use their capital in their discount business, they could not keep the amount of specie on hand necessary to answer the demands of commerce for foreign intercourse, and to keep their paper always convertible into specie.

It is clearly deducible from the principles of circulation and commerce, supported by the results of experience, that under this mode of banking, the same amount of specie would find its way into their vaults from payments and deposits, as in the present one, and be less likely to be driven out of the country by a too abundant and depreciated paper circulation; for they are not so patriotic as to employ their capital to import specie, and keep it on hand for time of need, any more than the merchant to export produce at a loss, to save the exportation of specie. The solitary instance of such an importation, instead of supporting their position, furnishes the most conclusive evidence of its fallacy. The United States Bank having most unwarrantably extended their business, brought on the wildest speculations, particularly in their own stocks, and caused the specie to be drained from the country, sent to England, purchased, and imported a large amount to aid them in paying the notes they were daily issuing, without compelling their debtors to pay theirs—either forgetting that their tellers could pay it out as fast as the cartman could roll it in, and that the laws of commerce would drive it from the country in less time than it took them to procure it—or desirous of keeping up the game of speculation, until they had accomplished their objects. They were at length constrained to apply the proper remedy, which, if used sooner, would have had the same effect, and prevented much evil; they lowered the gate, curtailed their discounts, and compelled their debtors to pay their notes. At once a new order of things was produced. Their bills, instead of standing boldly at the counter, demanding specie, came obsequious at their call in payment of their demands. The truth of my position is further proved by the experience of the Bank of England, whose capital has, from the beginning, been all vested in government stock, and its business confined to discounting business paper, yet has been able to sustain the immense mercantile operations of the nation with its credit alone, discounting every good note offered, has furnished the government important aid in its financial operations, and kept such an amount of specie on hand, as frequently to sell it for exportation, to avoid having too large an amount lying idle on their hands: And the experience of many banks on this side the Atlantic has shewn, that the nearer they approached to this mode of banking, the easier they passed through those changes of circulation which so violently agitated the other banks.

It is further objected, that they cannot meet their paper coming in, at times of reducing the circulation, and provide for the deficit on such business paper as usually lies over on such occasions, unless they have the power of coercing aid pro rata on all their debtors able to pay.

If indeed that was the practice, the evil would be more tolerable; yet in a case of necessity, their capital well invested or secured, would be a much more available fund from which to raise the temporary aid required to carry them through such a crisis, than the power of coercing accommodation debtors, who not expecting it, would be unprepared to meet the call. But it is too often the case that the whole is exacted from part, to save others from paying any, and even to furnish funds for speculation on the necessities of the times: And the mind sickens at the scenes of usury, extortion and oppression, practised by money holders, and the frauds, deceit and chicanery, resorted to by the debtors on such occasions, with the violent transitions of property attending them, which in a few years have produced almost a complete revolution of property in this and some adjoining states. And all this resulting as the necessary consequences of a pernicious system of banking, rather than the evil intent of men conducting banks.

Under this system, the banks would no longer be found holding up and giving a fictitious credit to a body of accommodation debtors, really insolvent, by means of which they are enabled to contract debts elsewhere, and thereby pay their notes, and save their indorsers harmless—Nor shouldering for each of their customers the consequences of successive indiscretions in the shape of accommodations, accumulate a load sufficient to crush them, which if left to themselves they would by effort have overcome separately. But by keeping the body of mercantile men to the duty of meeting their engagements, would gradually teach them the value of those wise maxims of trade, never to embark in an enterprise beyond their means to accomplish, or adventure more on one speculation than they can bear to lose; and thereby habits of prudence and dependence on the profits of regular business be produced, in place of that reckless spirit of adventure, under which they are constantly putting their all upon the hazard of a speculation as uncertain as a lottery; relying upon the facility of escape from the consequences of failure, from the frequency of their occurrence—a practice as variant from the sound maxims of mercantile business, as the present usage of the banks is from the genuine principles of banking.

This natural, safe and easy mode of banking, is founded on the immutable laws of circulation and commerce—certain in their operation as the laws of attraction and gravitation, which regulate the motion of bodies on the earth, and chain it in its orbit; explained and demonstrated by the ablest writers on national economy, and supported by the experience of every age and every country in which banks have been conducted successfully, and confirmed by the defeat and disgrace of every attempt hitherto made in opposition to them, to sustain credit not based on capital, or support a circulation not convertible into specie. It recommends itself to the patriot, statesman and philanthropist, as the most powerful and certain means of producing those regular habits of business, good morals and progressive prosperity, necessary to realize and perpetuate to distant ages those anticipations of the future greatness, virtue and happiness of their beloved country, which sustained our forefathers in their arduous struggle for its independence.

The annual report of the canal commissioners was read, in the words following, to wit:

TO THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF NEW-YORK.

The canal commissioners, in obedience to the law requiring an annual statement of the condition of the public works, and of their proceedings in relation thereto, report:

That during the last year the works on the Oswego canal, with a trifling exception, have been completed; and a good boat navigation has been extended from the Erie canal at Salina to the harbor of Oswego.

The expectation however, which they had indulged of finishing this work by the middle of the last summer, and of giving the public the advantages of its entire navigation during the latter part of the season, has not been realised.

Frequent and long continued rains and the prevalence of sickness have delayed its completion until the commencement of the present winter. The unfinished part of the canal was situated on the border of the Onondaga lake, and along the banks of the Oswego river, on ground but little elevated above the ordinary height of the water. A succession of floods overflowed the work, sometimes entirely interrupting its progress, and at other times rendering it tedious and expensive.

In the construction of a lock located in the edge of the river, the foundation of which was laid six or seven feet below the surface of the water, the difficulties encountered were for a time insurmountable. The excavation for the foundation had been begun in the fall of 1827; and the water which flowed freely through an open gravelly soil into the pit, was thrown out by pumping and bailing; but as the excavation was carried deeper the quantity of water rapidly increased, and the labor and expense became excessive. The men employed were soon after attacked with fevers; the contractor died, and the work, for that season, was abandoned. The floods of the last spring delayed the re-commencement of operations. An effort however, was made to discharge the water from the pit with pumps, worked with horses, but the influx was found too great to be thrown out by pumps or any machinery which could be conveniently obtained and worked by horse power, and the experiment resulted in the conviction that the surest resource was to a water power which might be introduced through the canal, from a dam on the river above, and applied to the working of a large wheel, constructed with curved buckets extending from the circumference of the wheel to its centre. A wheel of this construction had been used successfully in dipping the water from several coffer dams which had been sunk in excavating and deepening the bed of the river.

The dam and canal were not at this time finished, and while spirited exertions were making to complete them, and to construct the wheel and other necessary machinery, the work was suddenly checked by an appalling sickness. The superintendant who had in charge the construction of the lock, together with his laborers, were attacked with malignant fevers, and abandoned their work. Another company of men were employed, and these also, with scarcely a single exception, were seized with the same complaint; several died, and among them their superintendent, a most efficient and valuable man.

The contractor and laborers on the canal adjoining the lock, were afflicted with the same distressing malady, and the whole work was again nearly abandoned.

On the return of cool weather in autumn, the sickness abated, and other laborers and superintendents were employed. After which time, the wheel and machinery were completed and put into operation, and the work vigorously and successfully prosecuted to its final completion in the month of December.

The only unfinished work on the canal, is the dam before mentioned. The strength and rapidity of the current of the river, occasioned by a continued state of high water through the whole season, have prevented its entire completion. It is, however, in such a state of forwardness as to answer, for the present time, the purpose for which it was intended; and it can be finished when the floods subside, without any interference with the navigation.

One of the largest dams on the Oswego river, was undermined by the reaction of the heavy body of water which fell over it during the floods; and it became necessary to repair the injury, and to sustain the whole work by very extensive additions. This has been accomplished in so substantial a manner, as to remove all apprehensions of its future security.

The Oswego canal is thirty-eight miles in length: Of this distance, about one half consists of narrow canals, connected with the Oswego river by locks and dams; the other half is a slack water navigation in the river, accommodated with a convenient towing path along its bank.

Its structures of timber and stone consist of twenty-two towing path and other bridges, seven culverts, one aqueduct, two waste-weirs, and eight dams built across the river; thirteen locks of stone masonry, and one of stone and timber, having an aggregate lift of one hundred and twenty-three feet, which is the difference of elevation between the marsh lands at the village of Salina, and the surface of the water on Lake Ontario.

There has been paid for the construction of this canal, the sum of $505,115.37; and there will be required to balance unsettled accounts, and to pay the allowance which the canal board will probably make to contractors, the further estimated sum of $20,000, which will make the total cost $525,115.37.

The progress of the work on the Cayuga and Seneca canal, was retarded last spring by the high state of the water in the outlet, which affected portions of the work throughout the whole season; and the navigation from the Seneca lake to the Erie canal, did not commence so soon as had been expected. Early, however, in September, the navigation was opened from the lake to the Seneca falls, and from below the falls to the Erie canal, by the old route of the Seneca river.

About the fifteenth of November, the water was admitted into every part of the line, from the foot of the Seneca lake to the Erie canal at Montezuma; and an uninterrupted navigation was maintained for the remainder of the season.

The Cayuga and Seneca canal is now completed, with the exception of some unfinished work between Geneva and the foot of the lake, the deepening of the channel of the outlet at a few points, and the erection of a dam across the outlet near the Seneca river; but the little labor required to open the navigation throughout the whole line, justifies the belief that it will be accomplished as early as the first of May next.

In consequence of the imperfect state of the navigation, toll was not charged until the 20th of November.

This canal is twenty miles and forty-four chains in length, of which ten miles is an independent canal, and ten miles and forty-four chains is a slack water navigation in the natural channel of the outlet, accommodated with a tow-path on its bank. It has eleven locks, embracing seventy-three and a half feet of lockage, nineteen road and occupation bridges, 2710 feet run of tow-path bridges, five safety gates, three new dams, two dams partially rebuilt, six culverts, seventeen miles of fence, three lock-houses, and one collector's office.

The sum of $195,000 has been appropriated for the construction of this canal, of which there has been disbursed by the commissioners of the canal fund, to the Seneca lock navigation company, $53,603,53, and towards the construction of the canal, $144,396.78, which exceed the appropriation $2,999.25.—To complete the unfinished work, pay the allowances which may be made to contractors by the canal board, and assessments of damages, will probably require a farther appropriation of $16,000.

The cost of constructing this canal will vary but little from $7,500 per mile, which very considerably exceeds the original estimate of the engineer.

This has arisen in part from the unfavorable weather during the whole length of time the canal was constructing, the unexpected difficulties which have occurred in deepening the channel of the outlet, sinking the lock-pits, and other expensive excavations under water, and the execution of a variety of work not included in the original estimate.

The locks are constructed of wood, and although in some trifling respects defective, we feel confident they will be as permanent as the nature of the materials will admit.

The great length of time which has been occupied in making this canal, has been injurious to the business of a large district of country, and has been to us a source of much regret; but the delay must be ascribed to causes beyond our control. The great anxiety to obtain jobs on the canal, has, in many instances, resulted in contracts for prices below the value of the work, which led to embarrassments, and repeated abandonments of contracts. The time consumed in advertising for proposals in pursuance of the statute, has, at various periods, seriously retarded the progress of the work.

The line for a lateral canal from the Cayuga and Seneca canal, to the village of East-Cayuga, was re-surveyed in April last, and put under contract early in May.

The lock-pit, and about one third of the line, has been excavated, and the lock nearly finished. This lateral canal is one mile and sixty-eight chains in length, and has one lock of ten feet lift, connecting the canal with the lake.

The contractors experienced great difficulties in excavating the pit, on account of the quantity of water proceeding from springs, and the influx of water from the lake, through a porous soil. A much greater quantity of rock is found within the line of the canal than was expected, and according to the report of the engineer, the completion of this work will require a farther appropriation of $8,000. The whole work may be completed by the first day of July next.

The navigation of the Erie and Champlain canals commenced at an earlier, and continued to a later period than usual. The weather in the month of March was mild, and favorable to a speedy completion of the spring repairs, and the canals were open throughout their whole extent on the first of April, and the navigation continued without any material obstruction from the ice, until the 19th of December, affording a length of time more than sufficient for the requisite transportation. During two or three weeks at the commencement, and about the same length of time near the close of navigation, there was but little business done; all the merchandize had ascended the canals, and the products of the country destined to market had passed down, with a trifling exception, before the last of November.

The season, although favorable to a long continuance of navigation, has been remarkable for frequent and violent storms of rain, and in no former year have the canals suffered so much damage from floods, or been so frequently broken, as during the last summer.

So great and sudden were the inundations, that the water on several occasions, was raised over the embankments, and before measures could be taken to relieve the canal from its danger, they were broken down by the torrent. The breaches which occurred in this manner, were at Frankfort, Oriskany, and in the town of Watervliet, on the Erie canal, and at several places on the Saratoga level on the Champlain canal. Other considerable breaches took place on the Erie canal in the towns of Parma, Perrinton, Brutus and Verona. The reparations were made with all practicable expedition, and the interruptions to navigation were not of long continuance.

In January last the water found a passage round one of the wings of the dam at the foot of the harbor at Black-Rock, and occasioned a considerable breach. It was repaired, however, in a few days after it took place, at an expense of $1,300.

Since that time, the dam and the embankment on Squaw Island, and along the inner side of the pier, have been raised and strengthened. The pier has also been raised, and more compactly and perfectly filled with stone, and some additional works have been placed on the outside of the pier, for the purpose of shielding it more effectually from the ice which descends the adjoining rapid of the river.

The dam at the mouth of the Tonnewanta creek was defective it its original construction, and has been every year more or less injured by the floods. It was therefore deemed advisable to rebuild a part of it during the last summer, in a more substantial manner. This has been done, and the whole work is now in good condition.

The banks along the deep earth excavation on the mountain ridge, which had been torn down and defaced by the rains, have been in part repaired and protected, and preparations are making to give them additional security, and to remove the earth which has been carried into the bottom of the canal.

An excellent guard-lock has been constructed at the head of the feeder from the Genesee river; and the guard-gates which have been heretofore used, and found inconvenient for the passage of boats, have been removed. A house for the accommodation of a lock-keeper, has been erected: and the dam across the river, which had been injured by the floods, has been repaired. Some additional work is required to render the entrance of the feeder safe and convei ent, which will be done the ensuing spring.

The cut which conducts the waters of the upper branches of the Tonnewanta creek into the Oak-orchard creek, terminates at a point on the latter where the channel is too contracted to discharge the waters of the two streams. The adjoining land, which is low and level, is consequently overflowed. In floods, the water breaks over the embankment of the cut, and inundates a great extent of low lands. To obviate this difficulty, which not only injures the land, but afflicts the country with sickness, it is necessary to extend the cut, and connect it with the creek where the channel is more capacious, and perhaps to deepen or otherwise enlarge the present work. Proposals have been received for the performance of the contemplated work, on favorable terms; and a contract will be made for its completion the present year.

The foundation of the wings of the lock at Jordan was undermined, and some parts of the masonry were thrown out of their original position. The walls were taken down early last spring, and substantially rebuilt on a more large and secure foundation.

Several of the wooden trunks of the aqueducts are decayed, and must be rebuilt. Their present width will but barely admit of the passage of one boat at a time. This contracted size is not only inconvenient to the navigation, but subjects the aqueducts to continual injury from the impingement of heavy boats. Preparations have been made to rebuild them of such width as will allow boats to pass each other upon them, thereby avoiding the detention which has been heretofore experienced. The foundation of the piers and abutments have been extended, and the masonry is nearly completed, and all the remaining work will be finished before the commencement of navigation.

The dam across the Mohawk river at the head of the Minden feeder, which has been injured by the floods and the ice, has been in part rebuilt, and the whole will be put in good repair the ensuing season.

Arrangements have been made with the Schoharie creek bridge company, to accommodate the navigation with a permanent towing path, to be attached to a bridge now constructing by that company, which, when accomplished, will obviate the impediments that sometimes occur in crossing that stream, and will lessen the annual expense of maintaining a passage over it.

Nearly all the locks on the Erie canal have been furnished with additional culverts and gates, for the purpose of filling and discharging them with greater expedition.

Scales for the weighing of boats have been erected the past season at Syracuse and at West-Troy; and preparations have been made for the erection of another at Utica. They have been preferred to the hydrostatic lock, on account of their greater accuracy and facility.

Agreeably to the provisions of an act of the last session of the legislature, requiring the reconstruction of a lock and waste-weir on the old canal at Rome, that work has been put under contract, and will be completed in the course of the ensuing spring.

The three locks at Fort-Ann, which were laid in common lime mortar, before the discovery of water cement, have so far failed, and given such indications of further failure, as to render it necessary to rebuild them. Materials have been procured, and a contract made for their reconstruction by the 25th of April.

The wooden guard-lock at the head of the feeder at Fort-Edward is decayed and insecure, and one of the abutments of the aqueduct over Fish creek has been undermined. Contracts have been made for the rebuilding and finishing of these works early in April next.

The contractor who had charge of constructing the locks on the Glen's Falls feeder, and of completing the unfinished parts of it, although he entered into his contract on the 2d of August 1826, and was bound to complete the same by the first day of September 1827, had made but little progress previous to the first day of May last, when he declined to proceed farther. The work was re-let, and a new contract made on the fifth day of June, which has been prosecuted with energy. The locks are now all completed, and the whole extent of the feeder, it is expected, will be navigable early next season.

Many of the bridges have been rebuilt, and others are rebuilding, and in all instances of such increased height, and length of string-pieces, as to leave the navigation unobstructed.

The banks, to a considerable extent, on various parts of the canals, have been raised, and secured with a facing of timber or stone; and preparations are now making to secure, before the opening of navigation, those which are most rapidly wearing away.

In the execution of the work mentioned in the preceding statement, in the purchase of materials for the repairs of the present year, and in the payment of lock-tenders, and for ordinary repairs, there has been expended during the last year by the superintendents on the Erie and Champlain canals, the sum of	$223,900 56

By Henry Seymour, for improvements, damages, allowances on contracts, and payments of accounts,	33,008 25
By William C. Bouck, for improvements, unsettled contracts and damages,	35,404 03

There has been expended on the Oswego canal towards its construction, by Henry Seymour,	86,579 37

And towards constructing a lateral canal to the village of East-Cayuga,	6,500 00
Making the total amount of the expenditures by the canal commissioners and superintendents on all the canals, during the last year,	$498,938 38
In order, however, to give a full view of all the disbursements of the year, growing out of and consequent upon the construction of the canals, it is proper to add the following monies which have been paid by the commissioners of the canal fund, to wit:
Interest on canal debt,	424,010 15
Salaries of collectors, weigh-masters and inspectors,	36,160 00
Compensation of appraisers,	2,043 00
Allowances to contractors by canal board,	22,509 40
Damages appraised under a special act, to Joseph D. Selden,	6,376 00
Damages to Henry Lieber, for injury to boat and cargo in weigh-lock,	172 29

To Myron Holley, the amount received on sale of property reconveyed to him,	285 00
Printing, stationary, &c.	1,321 70
Incidental expenses of canal board,	271 00
Salaries of two canal commissioners,	3,000 00
	$1,002,287 72

This sum embraces all the expenditures of the last year, in constructing, maintaining, and repairing canals, in payment of interest on the canal debt, and all other charges appertaining to the public works.

The revenue which accrued from the canals, and from the several items which constitute the canal fund, have been as follows, to wit:

Receipts of toll,	$838,412 04
Auction duties, after payment of certain appropriations, estimating the receipt of the last quarter to equal that of the last quarter of the preceding year,	223,687 40
Salt duty, after deducting salaries and expenses of collecting, estimating the receipt of December to equal that of the preceding December,	138,128 36
Interest on money in deposit,	6,908 04
" on stock purchased,	10,676 19
Rent for surplus water,	1,723 00
Payments on sale of land,	13,900 00
	$1,233,435 03

This sum exceeds the total expenditures during the same period, as nearly as it is now practicable to ascertain it, by the sum of two hundred and thirty-one thousand one hundred and forty-seven dollars and thirty-one cents.

The receipt of toll falls twenty thousand six hundred and forty-six dollars and forty-four cents short of the receipt of the year 1827. This diminution of toll has been occasioned by the failure of the last year's crop. Wheat is the great staple of the western part of the state, and affords an amount of toll nearly equal to all the other articles which descend the Erie canal. It appears by a statement which has been furnished by Mr. Williams, the collector at Utica, (and which is appended to this report,) of the articles which passed that place in the year 1827 and 1828, that there has been a falling off in the last year of wheat and flour to an amount which is equal to 1,100,000 bushels of the former. This deficit has caused a reduction in the toll which is estimated at $75,000. Had the produce of the crop been in the usual proportion to the quantity of seed sown, there would have been more wheat and flour sent to market than in any former year, and the toll would have probably received an accession of more than one hundred thousand dollars.

It is probable that the failure of the last year's crop of wheat will lessen the quantity sent to market the ensuing year; and as the market is overstocked with many kinds of lumber, a diminished amount of toll may be expected on these articles; and it is believed that the increase of other articles to be transported will not be such as to augment the general amount to any considerable degree; and we therefore estimate the toll of the present year, $870,000

Auction duty,	230,000
Salt duty,	130,000
Payments on land, rent of surplus water, interest on stock purchased and monies in deposit,	30,000
	$1,260,000

The expenditures, for the ensuing year, will fall far short of those of any previous year since the construction of either of the canals, and we estimate them as follows, to wit:

For repairs, improvements and superintendance of the canals,	$200,000 00
Interest on the canal debt,	415,942 75
Payments of damages,	20,000 00
For the unfinished work on the Oswego, and Cayuga and Seneca canals, lateral canals, Glen's Falls feeder, contracts for rebuilding various structures on the Erie and Champlain canals, and for allowances on contracts,	80,000 00
Collection of toll and contingent expenses,	36,000 00
Payments to the proprietors of the Albany basin for toll received in 1828 and 1829,	5,500 00

This exhibit shews a balance in favor of the canal fund for the current year of $502,557 25.

The law in relation to the appraisement of damages is defective. It allows the admission of testimony on the part of the claimant, but makes no provision for the procurement of evidence in behalf of the state. And however unworthy of credit the testimony of witnesses may be who appear on the part of the claimant, there are no means provided for counteracting its effects.

Persons will not voluntarily appear to give testimony adverse to the interest of their neighbors, and if they would appear and give evidence on the solicitation of the appraisers, such solicitation would place the appraisers in the invidious situation of acting in the double capacity of parties and judges.

The bad effects of the law are also aggravated by the mode of appeal to the supreme court, which tribunal is bound to award such damages as from the testimony procured, in this ex parte manner shall appear to be just.

Cases have occurred in which claimants for damages have been able to procure individuals among their neighbors to estimate the damages, on their oaths, to an amount ten times greater than, in the opinion of the appraisers, founded on their personal observations, was believed to be just and reasonable; and such cases will frequently occur, because it is the interest of the claimant to bring as witnesses, such persons only as will estimate the damages at the highest possible sum.

The original law on the subject of damages which authorised the appraisers to make awards on a personal view and inspection of the damaged property, and on such information as they should deem necessary for a right understanding of the case, appears to us much preferable to the present law.

Mr. Al Burtis according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to incorporate the Bakers' benefit society of the city of New-York," which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Dana, from the committee on courts of justice, to which was referred the petition of Felix D. Fitzsimmons and Ann McManus, reported:

That the petitioners represent that a large estate whereof Felix Fitzsimmons, a naturalized citizen lately died seized, has escheated to this state in consequence of the alienage of his heirs: That the nearest surviving relatives of the said Felix Fitzsimmons are three brothers and one sister, and the children of a deceased brother, and of a deceased sister: That the petitioner, Felix D. Fitzsimmons is a son of the deceased brother, and the petitioner Ann McManus a daughter of the deceased sister: That they have resided nearly ten years in this state, but have not yet been naturalized: That one of the brothers of the deceased resides in this state, and all of the other relatives are aliens residing in foreign countries. And the petitioners request that they may be authorised to take such interest in the estate of their deceased uncle as they would have done had they been naturalized citizens at the time of his death; and that a similar privilege may be extended to the other relatives of the said Felix Fitzsimmons deceased.

If the said estate had escheated, your committee think it very impolitic to vest any part thereof in aliens resident abroad. But the committee have not found any satisfactory evidence that the property has escheated. On the contrary, it appears probable that the brother of the said deceased, who resides in this state, had been naturalized before the death of the said Felix Fitzsimmons, in which case the inheritance must have vested in him as the heir at law, and cannot be divested by any act of the legislature. The committee therefore deem it improper to interfere in the business, and have directed their chairman to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That the prayer of the petitioners ought not to be granted.

Thereupon,

Resolved, That this house do agree with the committee in their preceding resolution.

Mr. Dayton, from the select committee to which was referred the engrossed bill from the senate, entitled "An act concerning the marine insurance in the state of New-York," reported, that they have examined the said bill, and see no reason why the same should not be passed into a law.

Ordered, That the said bill be committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Edgerton, from the select committee to which was referred the petition of sundry inhabitants of the town of Saranac in the county of Clinton, reported:

On the part of the petitioners, it is alleged that there is in the poor chest of said town the sum of about three hundred dollars, which is entirely useless in consequence of a resolution which was passed by the board of supervisors of the county, abolishing the distinction between town and county poor, at their last annual meeting. The petitioners farther state, that the sum which is received by the said town for the support of common schools in said town, is not sufficient to keep a school in the several school districts one fourth part of the year. The petitioners therefore pray that a law may be passed, authorising the overseers of the poor for said town to pay over the said sum to the commissioners of common schools of the town, for the use of said schools: which request the committee think is reasonable, and that the prayer of the petitioners ought to be granted. They have prepared a bill accordingly, and directed their chairman to ask leave to introduce the same.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Edgerton according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to authorise the overseers of the poor of the town of Saranac to pay over certain monies to the commissioners of common schools of said town," which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Phœnix, from the select committee to which was referred the petition of Martin B. Young and others, praying for leave to construct a dam across the Canisteo river, reported:

That the petitioners set forth that Martin B. Young, one of their number, is desirous to erect mills on the Canisteo river, on lot number ninety-seven, in the town of Addison. To conduct a supply of water to propel such mills, a dam across said river is necessary, and that the erection of mills in that neighborhood would be of essential public utility. The committee are of opinion that a dam may be so constructed across said river, as not to impede the navigation, and conclude that the prayer of the petitioners is reasonable and ought to be granted. They have prepared a bill accordingly, and directed their chairman to ask leave to introduce the same.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Phœnix, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act authorising Martin B. Young to construct a dam across the Canisteo river;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

In pursuance of previous notice, Mr. Johnson asked for and obtained leave to bring in a bill entitled "An act authorising the commissioners of loans of the county of Oneida to sell certain lands;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

In pursuance of previous notice, Mr. Skinner asked for and obtained leave to bring in a bill entitled "An act relative to Middlebury academy in the county of Genesee;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

The house then proceeded to the consideration of the report of the committee of the whole, on the bill entitled "An act to reduce the number of trustees of the Fredonia academy in the county of Chautauque;" the report being that the committee had gone through the said bill, and agreed to the same without amendment.

Thereupon,

The report of the committee of the whole being amended by the house,

Mr. Speaker put the question whether the house would agree thereto, and it was determined in the affirmative.

Ordered, That the bill be engrossed.

On motion of Mr. Arnold,

Ordered, That the committee of the whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill entitled "An act exempting persons employed as clerks in post-offices, from militia duty;" and that the same be referred to a select committee, consisting of Mr. Arnold, Mr. Bradish and Mr. Brinkerhoff.

On motion of Mr. Edgerton,

Ordered, That the committee on privileges and elections be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of the supervisors of the county of Tioga, relative to the meetings of the board of county canvassers of said county; and that the same be referred to a select committee, consisting of the members attending this house from the county of Tioga.

Mr. W. Hall, from the committee on engrossed bills, reported, that they have examined the engrossed bill entitled "An act authorising the erection of a free bridge across the Chenango river in the town of Chenango in the county of Broome," and the engrossed bill entitled "An act to incorporate the Canajoharie and Sharon turnpike company;" and that the said bills are correctly engrossed.

Thereupon,

The said engrossed bill, entitled "An act authorising the erection of a free bridge across the Chenango river in the town of Chenango in the county of Broome," was read the third time.

Resolved, That the bill do pass.

Ordered, That the clerk deliver the said bill to the Senate, and request their concurrence to the same.

The said engrossed bill, entitled "An act to incorporate the Canajoharie and Sharon turnpike company," was read the third time.

Ordered, That the said bill be laid upon the table.

The engrossed bill from the Senate, entitled "An act relative to the Brooklyn Savings Bank," was read the third time.

Mr. Speaker put the question whether the house would agree to the final passage of the said bill, and it was determined in the affirmative, two-thirds of all the members elected to this house voting in favor thereof, as follows, to wit:

A communication from the canal appraisers was read in the words following, to wit:

The canal appraisers to whom were referred the petition of Elijah Butterfield and others, the petition of Lyman Littlefield and others, the petition of Daniel Payn and others, the petition of Samuel T. Shepherd and others, and the petition of Samuel Lewis and others, in obedience to the directions of the honorable the Assembly, respectfully report:

That they have examined the said several petitions: That as respects the two first above mentioned, the petitioners therein named represent, that the lands therein referred to have been injured in consequence of the surplus water, which has been thrown on them from the Champlain canal. That last summer we were called upon to estimate and appraise the damages which the petitioners alleged they had sustained by means thereof; but in as much as no lands, waters, or streams of the petitioners had been directly appropriated by the canal commissioners to the use of the canal, we came to the conclusion that by the 46th section, third article, ninth title and ninth chapter of the revised laws, which commenced and took effect on the first day of January, 1828, we had no power or authority granted to us to give relief to the petitioners in relation to the subject matter of those petitions.

By the 45th section aforesaid it is made the duty of the said appraisers, that when any lands, waters or streams, are appropriated by the canal commmissioners to the use of the public, to make a just and equitable estimate and appraisment of the damages and benefits resulting to the persons interested in the premises so appropriated from the construction of the work, for the purpose of making which, such premises shall have been taken. It seemed to the appraisers, that by virtue of this section, no power was directly given to them to estimate and appraise the damages alleged to have been sustained by the petitioners, and that they had no right to assume a power to act in those cases by inference or implication. By the act of the 48th session of the legislature, chapter 275, section first, passed April 20th, 1825, it was made the duty of the said appraisers to assess and appraise all unsettled claims for damages which any persons had sustained by means of either the Erie or Champlain canals, or any work connected therewith, &c. By this law very extensive powers were given to the appraisers in relation to the damages occasioned by the Erie or Champlain canals, or the works in any way connected therewith. We therefore came to the conclusion that the legislature, by the 46th section of the revised act aforesaid, intended to and did limit and abridge the powers of the appraisers as they existed under the act of the 20th of April, 1825, and again by the 52d section of the revised statute aforesaid, "The fee simple of all premises so appropriated in relation to which such estimate and appraisement shall have been made and recorded, shall be vested in the people of this state." The 50th and 51st sections of the same act directs the manner in which such title shall be perfected. The appraisers are of opinion that by no construction which can be given to the 46th section of the revised act aforesaid, can a conclusion be arrived at, by which the title to all the lands which have been injured in consequence of the canals should be vested in the people of this state, but that the true intent and meaning of the legislature, when they passed that act, was in our opinion, as the terms of the act indicate, to vest the title of those lands only in the people of this state, which was necessary to be taken for the direct and immediate construction of the canals. Much of the damages claimed by alleged injuries to lands have been produced by letting off the surplus waters at waste weirs, and by water passing off from the canals over and under the adjacent lands, and settling on low and level lands at various distances from the canals.

Alleged injuries have sometimes been sustained by the canal's breaking and letting the water off—thereby cutting wide and deep ravines through farms, and carrying and spreading earth for considerable distances on to the low lands below. Those pieces of lands alleged to have been injured are of different sizes and of various dimensions, and frequently situated in the middle of farms to which, notwithstanding the alleged injury, they are useful for the convenient management of those farms. And should the owners of the farms be divested of the title to those detached pieces of land, which are frequently located in different parts of the same farm, the remaining parts of those farms would be, in most cases, much reduced in value. And should the title to those pieces of land be vested in the people of this state, from their detached and insular situations would be of little or no value to them. We are therefore of opinion, in every point of view, that the petitioners can have no redress under any law now in existence.

The appraisers further report, that they have had the other three petitions under consideration. That the damages the petitioners therein named allege they have sustained, have been accasioned by the dam at Fort Miller across the Hudson river, by means whereof the water of the river is raised and set back so as to produce the alleged injury. That in the summer and autumn of 1825, we examined the cases of the petitioners. At that time it was expected that the new canal from Fort Edward to Fort Miller would be completed in the year 1826, after which time the said dam would no longer be of any use to the state, and that it would then be taken away, unless an arrangement could be made between the canal commissioners and the mill owners on the said dam, so as to indemnify the state against any damages which might be thereafter produced by keeping it up. In the winter of 1826 we acted and passed on the claims of most of the petitioners, to some of whom we awarded damages; and as to others of the said petitioners, we decided that the benefits and advantages resulting to them from the canal, were at least equal to loss and damage occasioned to them thereby. That those decisions were made with the express understanding, that the said dam should be taken away, as aforesaid, by means whereof it was supposed the alleged injuries would cease, or that the said mill owners would pay and satisfy the petitioners any damages they might thereafter sustain by means of keeping up the said dam. Last summer we were called upon by some of the petitioners to estimate and appraise the damages which they alleged they had sustained in consequence of continuing the said dam. We then decided that we were not authorised by any law now in existence, to take cognizance of those cases. And inasmuch as the claims of the last mentioned petitioners must be governed by the same principles which govern those of the petitioners first above mentioned, we are therefore of opinion that the petitioners cannot have relief by any existing law of this state.—All which is respectfully submitted.

JOSEPH D. SELDEN.
DAVID WOODS.

Dated 26th January, 1829.

Ordered, That the several petitions, together with the said communication, be referred to the committee on claims.

A communication from the canal commissioners was read, in the words following, to wit:

TO THE HONORABLE THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF NEW-YORK:

The canal commissioners, in obedience to the 3d section of an act entitled "An act to provide for the improvement of the navigation of the Hudson river," passed April 16th, 1827, respectfully report:

That in compliance with the 2d section of said act, security has been given to the Comptroller by the corporation of the city of Albany, for the payment of three thousand dollars; by the corporation of the city of Troy, for the payment of a like sum; and by the trustees of the villages of Lansingburgh and Waterford, for the payment of one thousand dollars, to be applied to the objects specified in said section.

After the above security was given to the Comptroller, contracts were made for the construction of a dredging machine, with all the apparatus necessary to work the same; and the whole was completed, so as to be put in operation in the month of June last.

The excavating machinery, with its appendages, consists of a large dredging machine with two setts of buckets, propelled by a steam engine of seventeen horse power; four large scows for receiving the contents of the excavation; and a large tow-boat with an engine of seventeen horse power, for towing the machine and scows; which were constructed under the inspection and supervision of a committee of three gentlemen, appointed by the cities of Albany and Troy, to wit: Joseph Alexander, Israel Smith and Townsend McCoun, Esquires, who diligently bestowed their time and attention to this subject without compensation.

For the aforesaid objects, the said committee have rendered an account of expenditures amounting to fourteen thousand dollars, being the amount of the appropriation, and which accounts have been approved by the Comptroller. By a reference to their report, (which is herewith submitted,) it will be seen that the cost of the machinery and apparatus has exceeded the appropriation by the sum of one thousand four hundred and twenty-six dollars and twenty-seven cents, which has been advanced by citizens of Albany.

Capt. Eliakim Ford, who was recommended by citizens of Albany, was appointed to superintend the operations of the dredging machine below the city, and commenced at the overslaugh, which presented the greatest obstructions to the navigation.

In pursuance of our directions, he excavated in a line with the thread of the stream, and, according to his report, he succeeded in making a channel through the lower overslaugh, of fifteen hundred and twenty-five feet in length, by one hundred and sixty feet in width, and ten feet in depth; and a like channel through Buckimplat's bar, of fourteen hundred and ninety feet in length, by one hundred and twenty feet in width, and of equal depth with the former. In performing this work, he was engaged seventy-six and a half days, during which time one thousand seven hundred and twenty-two scow loads, containing an average of twenty-four cubic yards of mud, sand and gravel, was excavated, and deposited in such a situation, as to be in no danger of being again washed into the channel.

By a reference to the annexed certificate, signed by many of the masters of vessels navigating the Hudson river, it will be seen that the effect produced on said bars, has been such as to enable, during the latter part of the past season, all the larger class of steam-boats and eastern vessels to pass through at all times, without detention or the expense of lighters.

In accomplishing the aforesaid work, the corporation of the city of Albany have expended four thousand dollars, which is one thousand dollars more than was required under the provisions of the act.

There now remains a distance of about fifteen hundred feet to be excavated, through Cuyler's bar, in a line with the new channel, to bring the depth of ten feet of water to the Albany pier.

From personal observations, as well as from the opinion of practical men and experienced masters and pilots in the river navigation, we entertain a favorable opinion of the efficacy of this mode of improving the navigation.

The channel being excavated in the thread of the stream, and parallel with the current, will constantly be swept by a moving volume of water, so as, in our opinion, to prevent any material accumulation of alluvial deposit; and the only serious difficulty which we think may be ever apprehended, will arise from the damming up of the ice upon the islands, on the breaking up of the river, by which the natural course of the current may be diverted and thrown diagonally across the excavated channels, which may thereby be partially or wholly filled with alluvion.

To what extent, if any, injuries of this kind may occur, future experience alone must determine.

SAMUEL YOUNG,
HENRY SEYMOUR,
WILLIAM C. BOUCK.

January 27th, 1829.

To the Honorable the Canal Commissioners.

GENTLEMEN,

The subscribers, together with Townsend M'Coun, of Troy, having been appointed by your board, agents to construct a steam dredging machine, and the necessary apparatus for working it, under a law passed April 16, 1827, proceeded to build one dredging machine containing a steam engine of 17 horse power; one towing boat with an engine of like power, and four large mud scows. The boats and scows are all built of the best materials, and in the most substantial manner, and the engines prove to be of the first order.—But, notwithstanding the utmost attention has been paid to economy in their construction, the first cost of them all exceeded the appropriation made by the legislature, the sum of $790.47. And on starting the engine, it was found that the motion of the machinery was much too quick; so that it became necessary to alter a considerable part of the running geer in order to graduate its movement. This has caused an additional expense of $635.80; which, with the excess in the first cost, and the purchase of the necessary tools and furniture, forms an aggregate of debt against the dredging machine of $1,426.27. When the want of experience is considered, and also that it became necessary to make an additional boat and engine for towing the mud scows, not contemplated when the law was passed, we trust it will not be deemed extraordinary that the amount of expenditure has somewhat exceeded the estimate.

The expenses of working the dredging machine have overrun the estimate for that purpose in a much greater proportion than the cost of building. These expenses are, by the present law, all payable by the cities of Albany and Troy, and the villages of Lansingburgh and Waterford, and constitute a heavy tax. The amount paid by Albany alone for only 76½ days last summer, being nearly $4,000. When the advantages of an improved navigation to the state at large, but especially to that part of it connected with the canals is taken into account, it is believed that the legislature will not hesitate to make provision by a new appropriation for the payment of the debt owing by the dredging machine, and also for its future operations.

We have great satisfaction in stating to the canal commissioners, that the operations of the dredge have been more favorable even than we had contemplated. And we subjoin for their information, a statement taken at the close of the season, from an account rendered by Capt. Ford, the superintendent, appointed by Mr. Bouck; and also a certificate as to the effect of the operations on the navigation of the river signed by a number of captains of steam-boats and other vessels.

All of which is respectfully submitted,

JOSEPH ALEXANDER,
ISRAEL SMITH.

Albany, January 23, 1829.

We the subscribers, masters and commanders of vessels and steam-boats navigating the Hudson river, do certify, that previous to the operation of the steam dredging machine on the Overslaugh and Buckimplat bars, and during the low water in the summer, it was very common to get our vessels aground on those bars, and that many times we have been detained on that account for several days at a time; but that since the channel has been opened by the steam dredging machine, although the water in the river has been uncommonly low, we have passed and repassed those bars without difficulty and without any expense for lighterage, which we were before subjected to.

COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
Albany, 27*th Jannary*, 1829.

SIR—

I have the honor to transmit herewith, to the honorable the Assembly, a report, made in obedience to their resolution relative to the Delaware and Hudson canal company.

I am, with great respect,
Your ob't. serv't.
W. L. MARCY.

Hon. PETER ROBINSON,
Speaker of the Assembly.

The Comptroller, in obedience to a resolution of the honorable the Assembly, of the 15th instant, requesting him to report to that house, "the proceedings which have taken place under the act entitled 'An act to loan the credit of the people of the state of New-York, to the president, managers and company of the Delaware and Hudson canal company, and for other purposes,' passed March 10th, 1827; the amount of stock issued in pursuance of the said act; the time and manner in which the same has been issued; the price at which it has been sold, and if at a premium, the amount of such premium, and the manner in which the same has been applied; the nature and extent of the security given to the state by the said company, for the faithful redemption of the said stock, agreeably to its conditions, and the punctual payment of the interest thereon, quarterly, until the said stock shall be so redeemed: And also any information he may possess, derived from personal observation, as to the present condition of the property pledged to the state by the said company, as such security; the title and estimated value of such property, and consequent sufficiency of such security; and, generally, whether from the present condition of the property, and the reasonable prospect of its future improvement and use, the expectations of the state as to its public utility, are likely to be realized;" respectfully reports:

That the president, managers and company of the Delaware and Hudson canal company, on the 14th day of March, 1827, pursuant to the 6th section of the "Act to loan the credit of the people of the state of New-York to the president, managers and company of the Delaware and Hudson canal company, and for other purposes," duly executed a mortgage to the said people, of the following property, to wit:

All those certain lots, number five, seven and eight, with the appurtenances, described as follows, to wit: Number five, two-thirds of a lot of land commonly called the Caatsbaan, being an orchard containing about sixteen acres, being undivided, and encumbered with three dowers. Number seven, the farm formerly belonging to Philip Swart, lying at Kingston Landing, containing about fifty acres of land. Number eight, a lot beginning between the store of Abraham Hasbrouck and the store occupied by John D. Middach and company, and runs thence along the garden fence of William Swart, and along the foot of the hill, through the orchard, to the board fence, including said orchard; thence along said fence to the creek, and then down the said creek to the place of beginning, containing about six acres, with the improvements thereon; being the same lots or parcels of land set forth and described in a deed of conveyance, bearing date the sixth day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-six, executed by Peter Van Gaasbeck junior and Thomas C. Van Gaasbeck, administrators, with the will annexed of Jacobus Van Gaasbeck, deceased, of the town of Kingston in the county of Ulster, and state of New-York, to John Bolton, of the city of New-York, for and in behalf of the said president, managers and company of the Hudson and Delaware canal company, and their successors.

Also, all those certain lots, pieces or parcels of land and premises, situate, lying and being in the town of Deerpark, in the county of Orange. The first of which is bounded as follows, to wit: Beginning at a heap of stones on the Delaware river, on the bank, and runs from thence north fifty-five and an half degrees, east along the line of Stephen St. John's land, forty-three chains, to a white-oak sapling with a heap of stones around it, on the line of lands formerly of Wilhelmus Cole, but which lands, on the second day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-six, belonged to Portons R. Root, of the said town of Deerpark, and being the second lot conveyed by the said Portons R. Root to the said president, managers and company of the Delaware and Hudson canal company, by deed bearing date on the said second day of August, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-six; thence south, sixty-two degrees east along the said land, eighteen chains and ninety links to a stone standing in the road leading from Carpenter's point, along the Delaware river to Shingle-Kill; thence south fifty-three and an half degrees, west along the line of Elias Kingkendall's land forty-seven chains and twenty links, to a heap of stones at the Delaware river; thence up the said river to the place of beginning; containing eighty acres of land; excepting out of the same, two acres now owned by Francis Kelly, lying in the easterly corner thereof; which said tract was conveyed to the said Portons R. Root, by Wilhelmus Westfall and Margery his wife, by deed bearing date the second day of August, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-six. The second of the said pieces of land adjoins the above mentioned lot, and is bounded as follows, viz: Beginning at a stone standing on the road between the dwelling-houses of said Westfall and Jacob Cuddeback junior, at the north corner of Elias Kingkendall's land, and runs thence south thirty-five degrees and thirty minutes, east along the line of said Kingkendall's land two chains and forty-eight links to a stone at the southwest side of the road; thence north forty-eight degrees and thirty minutes, east along the line of Jacob Cuddeback junior's land 5 chains and 65 links, to a corner of his land; thence north 35 deg. and 40 min., west along the line of said Cuddeback's and Elias Kingkendall's land, 34 chains to the line of lot number 46 in the 7th division of Minisink patent; thence south 69 deg., west along the line of said lot number 46, 22 chains and 22 links, to a stone at a corner or line of Stephen St. John's land; thence south 58 deg., east along the line of Stephen St. John's land and the first above mentioned lot, 40 chains, to the place of beginning, containing forty-six acres of land, be the same more or less. The undivided half of the said last mentioned lot, was conveyed to the said Westfall by Josias Cole and wife, by deed dated the nineteenth day of November, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-five, and the remaining half by Cornelius W. Cole, to whom it was conveyed by Wilhelmus Cole, by deed dated the eighteenth day of November, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-five; the said last described lots, pieces or parcels of land and premises, being the same conveyed by the said Portons R. Root to the said president, managers and company of the Delaware and Hudson canal company, by the said deed, bearing date the second day of August, in the year one thousand eight hundred and twenty-six.

And also, of the bed of the Delaware and Hudson canal, and the lands adjoining thereto, and necessary for the useful enjoyment thereof, and basins connected therewith, together with the toll-houses and their appurtenances, and every thing appertaining to said canal: which said canal commences on the tide waters of the Hudson river, and extends up and along the valley of the Rondout and Sandberg creeks, to its summit level in the county of Sullivan, and so on southwesterly to the Delaware river; and thence up and along the east bank of the Delaware river, to a point or place on the Delaware river opposite to the mouth of the Lackawaxen river, and thence across the Delaware river to the line of the state of Pennsylvania, as worked or laid out, and partly worked and laid out, within the counties of Ulster, Orange and Sullivan, within the state of New-York.

And also, the nine following described tracts or pieces of land situate in Luzerne county, in the state of Pennsylvania, three of them lying contiguous to each other, called in the patents for the same respectively, "Silver Mine," "Calypso" and "Jessamine," surveyed on warrants bearing date, respectively, the 5th day of November, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-two; one of them granted in the name of Jonathan Kellogg, another in the name of Oliver Smith, and the other in the name of Elizabeth Kellogg, bounded by lands surveyed in the names of Rebecca Dena, Nathan Wade, Jacob Flanders, Jacob Fisher, John Clark, Anderson Dena and Aziel Dena, and others; containing together one thousand two hundred and three acres, and the usual allowances for roads and highways.

Another of them, (being part of a tract called "Spruce-Valley,") beginning at the southermost corner of the said tract called Spruce-Valley, where a dogwood formerly stood, thence extending along a line of the said large tract, north 44 deg., east 121 perches, to a black oak sapling; thence by land of Samuel W. Fisher, north $54\frac{1}{2}$ deg. west 96 perches, to a stone; thence south 35 deg., west 130 perches, to a chesnut sapling standing on the southwesterly side of the said large tract, and thence along the same, south 57 deg., east about 77 perches, to the place of beginning, containing about 68 acres strict measure.

Another of the said tracts, (being part of a tract called "Lofty Oaks,") beginning at an old white pine, the easternmost corner of the said tract called Spruce-Valley, thence by lands surveyed to William Peirce, north 44 deg., east 180 perches, to a white oak sapling; thence by land surveyed to Hannah Bell, south 46 deg., east 100 perches, to a black oak sapling; thence by other land of the said Samuel W. Fisher, south 44 deg., west 180 perches, to a stake in the line of land surveyed to David Lewis; and thence by the same, north 45 deg., west 100 perches, to the place of beginning, containing 112½ acres strict measure.

Another of them, (being part of two tracts called "Greenfield" and "Industry,") beginning at a stake in the northwesternmost corner of a tract of land granted by the said Samuel W. Fisher to John Secor; thence extending by the same south 54½ deg., east 162 perches, to a hemlock; thence north 35½ deg., east 97 perches, to a corner; thence north 45 deg., west 164 perches, to a post in the line of a tract surveyed to Levi Peirce, and thence along the same line and the northwesternmost line of a tract surveyed to William Perce, south 35½ deg., west 125 perches, to the place of beginning, containing about 112 acres, and 62 perches strict measure; and the other two of them lying contiguous to each other in Greenfield township, one of them called "Mansfield," lying on a branch of Lahawana creek, beginning at a cucumber tree, thence by surveyed land and the hereinafter described tract, north 46 deg., west 278 perches, to a beech; thence by vacant land, south 44 deg., west 320 perches, to a hemlock sapling, south 46 deg., east 220 perches, to a birch; thence by surveyed land, north 44 deg., east 122 perches, to a post, south 46 deg., east 132 perches, to a post by vacant land; north 44 deg., east 38 perches to a hemlock; north 46 deg., west 74 perches to a hemlock, and north 44 deg., east 160 perches, to the place of beginning, containing four hundred and ninety-nine acres and a quarter, and allowance as aforesaid; and the other of them, called "Fairview," situate on Lackawanock creek, beginning at a beech sapling; thence by the last above described tract, south 46 deg., east 260 perches, to a hemlock; thence by vacant land, north 44 deg., east 320 perches, to a heap of stones; thence by surveyed land, and land of Walter Porter, north 46 deg., west 260 perches, to a beech, and thence by land of Peter Porter, south 44 deg., west 320 perches, to the beginning, containing four hundred and ninety acres and a half, and allowances as aforesaid.

And also, a certain tract or piece of land, situate in the township of Blakely, in the county of Luzerne, in the state of Pennsylvania, conveyed by John Wurtz, of the city of Philadelphia, Esquire, to the said president, managers and Company of the Delaware and Hudson canal company, and their successors and assigns, by deed bearing date the first day of November, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-five, and bounded and described therein as follows, viz. beginning at a sugar tree corner, thence north 44 deg., east 320 perches, to a corner; thence by land of Jacob Porter and others, south 46 deg, east 232 perches, to a corner; thence by land of Henry Rider and Samuel Rider, south 44 deg., west 320 perches, to a corner; thence by lands of Norman Lee, north 46 deg., west 232 perches, to place of beginning, containing 437 acres, and 124 perches, (it being the same premises which John P. De Grouchy, of the town and county of Northumberland, in Pennsylvania, and Catharine his wife, by indenture, bearing date the seventh day of October, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-five, granted and conveyed unto the said John Wurtz, in fee.)

And also, of the right of making a canal or slack-water navigation, or other communication through the said state to the coal mines in said state, as is particularly set forth in the several acts of the legislature of Pennsylvania, entitled as follows, to wit: "An act to improve the navigation of the river Lackawaxen," passed on the thirteenth day of March, in the year one thousand eight hundred and twenty-three. "A supplement to the act, entitled 'an act to improve the navigation of the river Lackawaxen,' passed March 13th, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-three," passed on the first day of April, in the year one thousand eight hundred and twenty-five. "A further supplement to an act, entitled 'an act to improve the navigation of the river Lackawaxen,' passed March thirteenth, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-three," passed on the ninth day of February, in the year one thousand eight hundred and twenty-six. "A further supplement to the act, entitled 'an act to improve the navigation of the river Lackawaxen,' passed March 13th, 1823," passed 5th April, 1826.

In addition to the bed of the canal and the lands adjoining thereto, and necessary for the useful enjoyment thereof, and basins and toll-houses above described, the mortgage includes all the rights, privileges and appurtenances in, and belonging to the bed of the canal, and the tow-path thereunto appertaining, not only as the same was granted, made or completed at the time of executing the mortgage, but as they shall be made or completed, whether situate in this state or the state of Pennsylvania; and all privileges necessary and incident to the said canal, as the said president, managers and company might thereafter possess the same by the laws of this state or the state of Pennsylvania.

This mortgage was duly approved by the Attorney-General and accepted by the Comptroller, on the 16th day of March 1827, as the assignment or collateral security required to be received by him before the issuing of any of the stock directed to be issued by the act before mentioned; and on the same day it was recorded in the office of the Secretary of state.

In relation to the title of the property mortgaged to the state, the Comptroller is informed that satisfactory evidence was submitted to the Attorney-General, of the rights of the mortgagors to the premises before described, and his approval of the mortgage to the state was preceded by and resulted from his full examination of their title deeds.

The company having furnished the security directed by the sixth section of the above mentioned act, the Comptroller did, on the 16th day of March, 1827, issue and deliver to them, one hundred certificates of stock, of one thousand dollars each, bearing an interest of five per cent., payable quarterly, reimbursable at the pleasure of the state, after the year one thousand eight hundred and forty-seven.

On the 20th day of October thereafter, the company deposited with the Comptroller, the monthly accounts rendered to them by their agent, Maurice Wurts, signed by him, and approved and countersigned by their president and treasurer, showing the expenditure on the said canal subsequently to the issuing of the said stock, of more than $100,000. Thereupon the Comptroller issued to the said company another 100,000 dollars of stock, according to the provisions of the third section of the aforesaid statute.

On the 22d of October, the company produced to the Comptroller the monthly accounts of their agent, duly signed by him, and countersigned by their president and treasurer, showing an expenditure on the canal since the passage of the aforesaid act, amounting to more than two hundred thousand dollars, including the amount before rendered. The Comptroller then issued a third time, stock as before described, amounting to another 100,000 dollars.

On the 14th January, 1828, the company produced other monthly accounts, certified and signed by their agent, and countersigned by their president and treasurer, amounting, with those before that time rendered, to more than 400,000 dollars; and thereupon the Comptroller issued the remainder of the $500,000 of stock directed to be issued by the statute heretofore referred to.

The following tabular statement relative to the issuing and sale of the stocks, and of the premium received thereon, will present the most satisfactory view of the whole transaction.

Stock issued by the Comptroller to the President, Managers and Company of the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, as follows:

1827, March	16,	100	certificates at $1000 each, ...	$100,000	00
" Oct.	20,	100	do do	100,000	00
" "	22,	100	do do	100,000	00
1828, Jan.	14,	200	do do	200,000	00
				$500,000	00

Monthly abstracts duly authenticated as required by law, as follows:

1st.	From 17th March to 30th April, 1827, amount,.....	$25,981 69
2d.	For the month of May,.....	28,193 45
3d.	For June and to the 12th July, ...	84,938 51
4th.	From 12th July to the end of August,.....	74,584 24
5th.	From 1st to 24th September,.....	64,645 36
6th.	For October to the 24th November,.....	68,889 28
7th.	From 24th November to 24th December,.....	58,802 06
	Total amount,.....	$406,034 59

Thus it will be perceived that the authenticated accounts of expenditure, exceed the amount actually required by law, more than $6,000.

The stock issued as above stated, was sold pursuant to the directions of the law authorising the issuing of it, as follows:

1827, Oct. 31,	$100,000, at a premium of 11½ per cent. The premium, after deducting the expense of sale, amounted to,...	$11,478 25
" Dec. 5,	$100,000, at a premium of 11 per cent., yielding..	10,978 25
" " 31,	$100,000, at a premium of 8¾ per cent., yielding ..	8,353 25
1828, Feb. 29,	$100,000, at a premium of 7¾ per cent., yielding...	7,727 25
" May, 31,	$100,000, sold at different rates of premium,.....	7,668 00
	Total amount of premium,.....	$46,205 00

The whole amount of premium realised from the sale of this stock, is $46,205, and it has been applied to the increase of the common school fund.

Of the punctual payment by the company of the interest on all the stock thus issued, the Comptroller does not entertain the slightest doubt. Three hundred thousand dollars of it are owned by the people of this state, and under his charge as its fiscal officer: On which the interest has been promptly and fully paid; and he has never heard that there was any failure or delay in paying the interest on the remainder. If such had been the case, the knowledge of it would not probably have been withheld from the Comptroller; who, as the financial officer of the state, would naturally be the first to receive information of the violation of its faith in regard to its pecuniary transactions.

The Comptroller has felt some embarrassment as to his duty in answering that part of the resolution which appeals to his opinion of the value of the property pledged to the state for its security, derived from his personal observations. His opportunities have been very few of acquiring that sort of information asked for in the conclusion of the resolution, and his personal examination of the work, was made without any view to obtain an accurate knowledge of its character, and without the remotest idea of being required to answer a call like the one now made upon him.

Individuals, of much private worth, have embarked their fortunes in this great enterprise, and after expending nearly two millions of dollars, and approaching, as they think, towards the enjoyment of all those advantages for which they have risqued so much, are now struggling with their last difficulties. The Comptroller would be extremely unwilling, by an excess of caution, to increase, if his reserve could increase these difficulties, or delay the completion of a work, which, if advantageous to the spirited individuals embarked in it, must be so to a portion of the citizens of this state, who have not exposed themselves like these individuals, to the hazards of the undertaking. On the other hand, his duty to the state urges him to great circumspection in giving encouragement, by speculative opinions, to the investments of its funds, or the assumption of burdens upon expectations that are not likely to be fully realized. While he would be solicitous to guard the state from hazard and ultimate loss, by lending its money to unpromising adventures, he would be willing to see it seconding individual efforts in undertakings that improve the condition of any portion of its citizens, and exalt its character for public spirit and hardy enterprise.

Under these impressions of duty to the state, and respect for the enterprising character of the Delaware and Hudson canal company, he will present such views of the company's canal, as his limited information has furnished him in relation to the nature and extent of the property pledged to the state, and to the reasonable prospects of its future improvements and use.

The canal of the company commences near Kingston, and runs through Ulster, Sullivan and Orange counties, eighty-one miles. That part of it which extends from the Hudson to the Delaware river, a distance of fifty-nine miles, had been finished and in operation some time, when it was viewed by the Comptroller.

His own observations confirmed the reports of impartial judges, who represented this part of the company's work to be a well-made and permanent canal, with stone locks. The canal extends up the north side of the Delaware river twenty-two miles, then crosses it into the state of Pennsylvania, at the mouth of the Lackawaxen, and proceeds up that river nearly twenty-five miles, to Honesdale, where it terminates at the foot of a rail-road, partially constructed, which leads to the coal mines, situated about sixteen miles from the canal. The banks of the Delaware and Lackawaxen rivers, are generally high and precipitous, and the canal passes most part of the way near the rivers, and sometimes encroaches upon their beds. These streams are undoubtedly subject to considerable floods. The canal is carried probably above the reach of these floods, and is defended against their assaults by very permanent walls. Some fears might possibly be entertained, that when the water was very high and rapid, trees and rafts may be carried with such violence against the walls, as to batter it down in some places. To prove the groundlessness of these fears, which were expressed by the Comptroller when he examined the work, he was shown a wall in very exposed situations on the Delaware, which, it was said, had stood the test of one or two seasons, and it did not appear to have sustained the slightest injury. The canal along the Delaware and Lackawaxen, was completed when it was viewed by the Comptroller, but had not been filled; it had not then afforded the last and most essential proof of a well-constructed work,—a capacity to sustain a full head of water. This proof, to a considerable extent at least, must have been since afforded, because many tons of coal which lay at its termination, have been brought on it to market. The Comptroller can pronounce with confidence, that the canal, from the Hudson to the Delaware, speaking in reference to its construction, is a good one; and he does not know that the remainder of it is not entitled to the same character. The locks on the upper part of it, do not promise a like durability to those which have been before spoken of; because they are constructed with wooden chambers.

On the rail-road, the Comptroller will make only this observation, that it was not in such a state of forwardness as to afford of itself, to one wholly unacquainted with such works, any assurance as to its practical operation; and never having seen a rail-road in operation, he can form no opinion of it by comparison.

The next important requisite to good canal navigation, after a well-constructed work, is a sufficiency of water. That part of it which runs down the Lackawaxen, can derive a most abundant supply from that river. The Delaware will supply the twenty-two miles on its shore. The Neversink and Mongaap each furnish an excellent feeder. From the abundance of water in the canal, when the Comptroller passed along on it, between the Hudson and Delaware rivers, it did not occur to him that any fears were to be apprehended for the want of water, and he believes that on this subject now (whatever might once have been the case) no fears can be reasonably indulged.

If this canal, in regard to its fitness for navigation, is all it is represented to be, yet it is no adequate security to the state for the credit which it has already loaned to the company; much less a security for further engagements it may enter into to aid this company in their enterprise, unless it is to be much used for the transportation of property. What is the extent of business that will naturally be done on this canal? How much will this business be increased by the company's transportation of coal? A correct answer to these two questions, if it could be given, would remove all difficulties, and confirm all hopes or fears in relation to the success of this great undertaking. Inasmuch as the events of the future cannot be certainly known, these questions cannot receive a precise answer.

The timorous will see, or think they see, dangers that never will be felt; and the sanguine will be amused by hopes that never will be realized.

By an attentive consideration of all the facts and circumstances that bear upon these questions, such results may be arrived at, as will form proper motives of conduct.

The Comptroller regrets that his knowledge of these facts and circumstances is so imperfect, that he can furnish but little aid to the house in coming to these results.

The region through which the canal passes, particularly after it leaves the valley of the Rondout and Mamakating Hollow, is far from being one of great fertility.

The quantity of surplus agricultural products of the country bordering on the canal, and seeking a market through it, cannot, in the opinion of the Comptroller, be very great, and consequently the quantity of merchandize transported through the same channel, for the use and consumption of the population of the same district of country, will be proportionably limited.

This state of the case would be somewhat varied, if the inhabitants on the Susquehannah, which is distant about thirty-five miles from the termination of the canal, should make use of it to supply themselves with merchandize, and to convey their surplus productions to a market. Whether this business will be drawn to the canal; and still further, whether a portion of the lumber which is embarked on the Delaware river, will take a direction through the canal to the New-York market, sometimes a preferable one to Philadelphia—events confidently calculated on by the company,—are questions upon which the Comptroller is not prepared to offer an opinion. After taking the best view of this part of the subject that his information has enabled him to make, he does not believe, (and it is due to the company to say, they have never sanguinely contended,) that, disconnected from their contemplated coal operations, the canal will yield, till after many generations, any thing like a profitable return for the investments made in it. The toll from the business, exclusive of that arising from the transportation of coal, will pay a part, and probably a considerable part, of the expenses of repairs and superintendence, and perhaps ultimately the whole of them.

The views heretofore presented, seem to lead to this conclusion, that the success of the enterprise, and consequently the security of the state for the credit it has loaned to the company, will depend principally upon the success of the coal business. It was this business that suggested the enterprise of constructing the canal, and the Comptroller believes that the sanguine hopes of those who have embarked in it, never rested upon any other basis than the profits to be derived from their coal. To the people of this state, it is important to know that the expectations of the company in this particular, are well-founded.

The consumption of coal, particularly the anthracite kind, has increased with great rapidity within a very few years. It is not only applied to household uses, but large quantities of it are demanded in conducting many extensive branches of manufactures. If it should, as it is believed it will, become reduced in price, it will probably be substituted generally for wood used as fuel, in cities and places where the latter is scarce and dear; and unless new coal regions are discovered, or much greater facilities of procuring it are devised, the demand will in all probability be quite equal to the supply.

Whether the Delaware and Hudson canal company can advantageously avail themselves of this probable state of things, will depend upon the comparative goodness of their coal, and the comparative cheapness at which they can supply the market. The coal with which that of the company will have to enter into competition, will be the Schuylkill and Lehigh. The mines opened on

Rhode-Island, do not yield coal in sufficient abundance, or of such a quality, as to be regarded a rival source of supply.

The Lehigh and Schuylkill coal have been for some years in common use in several parts of this state, and the character of each, at this day, is well known. The character of the Lackawannock coal (the company's coal,) has, till very recently, been in this quarter, a subject of speculative opinion. It has now, however, been introduced into market, and its quality is no longer a matter of vague speculation. The Comptroller's own opinion, derived from a limited use of the three kinds of coal, is in coincidence with that which he has procured from the Messrs. Townsends, of the city of Albany, who, as manufacturers using each kind, have had the means of instituting a comparison, and forming a true judgment of their relative goodness. The following reply to his written application to them for information relative to the company's coal, is entitled to much more consideration than any thing that the Comptroller can offer of his own to the Assembly.

SIR,

Your favor of the 20th inst. was duly received, asking our opinion as to the quality of the Lackawannock coal: We have made trial of it at our furnace establishment, and at the Troy iron and nail factory, and the report we have received from the foremen of both establishments, is, that they prefer this coal for heating and melting iron, to the Lehigh, or any other anthracite coal which they have used.

It will ignite in much less time, and the same weight will produce a better result.

Mr. Lemuel Pomeroy, of Pittsfield, Massachusetts, is extensively engaged in manufacturing arms for the United States government, and is now using the Lackawannock coal. We have received a letter from him, in which he states his decided preference for this coal for welding gun barrels, and for the general uses of his factory. Twenty or more families in this city, within our knowledge, are using this coal; who all give it the most decided preference to the Lehigh or Schuylkill for the grate. From our experience in witnessing the use of this coal in the different manufactures of iron and nails in which we are engaged, we give it as our most decided opinion, that the Lackawannock coal will be preferred to any other anthracite, for all manufacturing purposes.

We are, Sir,
Very respectfully,
Your ob't. serv'ts.
I. & J. TOWNSEND.

William L. Marcy, Esq. Comptroller.

From a personal examination of the coal region belonging to the company, the Comptroller is satisfied that no fears should be entertained as to the quantity they can furnish. If it is not wholly inexhaustable, it is not probable, that with the utmost demand for it, and the greatest possible facility and despatch in forwarding it to market, the beds of coal already discovered at the termination of the rail-road, and within a few miles around it, could be exhausted in two hundred years.

The quantity being abundant if not exhaustless, and its quality such as to enable it to enter into fair competition, when in the market, with any other kind of anthracite coal; can coal from any other quarter be delivered at New-York, or on the Hudson river, at such a price as to render the business of the company profitless or losing?

The answer to this question is very important in relation to the states' security. The price of coal in the market, depends upon the cost of the article in a state of nature, the expense of quarrying, and of transporting it to the market.

The article in a state of nature is already acquired by the company. Their beds at Carbondale are so advantageously situated, that very little expense need be incurred to prepare the coal for delivery into the rail-road cars.

If the rail-road should answer the expectations which are formed of it, by those who are acquainted with such works; if that part of the canal which was finished, but not in operation when the Comptroller viewed it, should prove as good as the line between the Hudson and the Delaware, no reasonable doubt can be entertained that this coal can be brought on to the Hudson river, or to the market at New-York, and sold advantageously for the company, for a price greatly below that at which the Lehigh and Schuylkill coal have heretofore been sold.

What reduction, if any, on the Schuylkill and Lehigh coal could now be made, and the business continue to yield a fair profit; and what reduction may be hereafter made on each or either of these kinds of coal, by means of opening new and cheaper avenues for bringing them to market, the Comptroller is unable to form a confident opinion.

The hidden riches of this country are occasionally laid open by fortunate accident, or the persevering efforts of its enterprising inhabitants, and hopes may possibly be entertained by some, that valuable and abundant coal mines may yet be discovered on or near our navigable waters, that might supply the article much below the cost of bringing it to market from the region in which it is now known to exist: but men should not, and wise men do not, act with any special reference to such exceedingly rare events. They do not neglect improving the means they have, and spend their lives in waiting for fortune and accident to furnish them with better.

As the resolution sent to the Comptroller has relation to a subject in which the state has an extensive pecuniary interest involved, he regrets that his personal observations, and general information relating to it, were not such as to enable him to offer to the honorable the Assembly, opinions more confident, and more precisely responding to the objects of inquiry presented to him.

All which is respectfully submitted,

W. L. MARCY, Comptroller.

January 26*th*, 1829.

Ordered, That the said report be referred to the select committee of which Mr. Bradish is chairman.

Ordered, That the usual number of copies of the said report be printed for the use of the legislature.

A communication from the comptroller was read, in the words following, to wit:

Albany, January 27, 1829.

SIR,

I take the liberty to inform the branch of the Legislature over which you preside, that the office of comptroller has this day become vacant, by my acceptance of the appointment of a justice of the supreme court. In retiring from the station which I have so long occupied by the kind partiality of the representatives of the people, I should not do justice to my feelings, if I did not express my grateful acknowledgments, not only for the honor bestowed on me, but for the liberal confidence and support I have received from each Legislature, through the whole course of my official duties.

I have the honor to be, with great respect,
Your obedient servant,

W. L. MARCY.

Hon. Peter Robinson,
Speaker of the Assembly.

Ordered, That the said communication be laid upon the table.

A message from the Governor, delivered by his private secretary, was read, in the words following, to wit:

TO THE ASSEMBLY.

GENTLEMEN,

I have the honor of laying before you the annual report required by law of the commissary-general.

STATE OF NEW-YORK—Commissary-General's Office,
New-York, January 20, 1829.

ALEXANDER M. MUIR,
Commissary-General.

[Sig. P.]

ACCOMPANYING REMARKS.

The commissary-general respectfully refers to his general return, and the accompanying tables, as presenting a view of the department confided to his care.

During the past season, he has visited all the arsenals belonging to the state, in which there is a deposite of arms or munitions of war, (except the one at Russell,) and reports the arms fit for service, the property contained in them in a state of preservation, and the buildings generally in good order.

In the month of December last, there were received from the United States, forty-two brass cannon, with their field carriages, implements, and gunner's equipments complete; forty of which are in payment of this state's quota of arms, under the act of congress of 1808, for arming and equipping the militia; and the other two pieces were received as a payment on the old unsettled account for issues made to the militia in the service of the United States during the late war. These cannon are designed to supply, as far as they will do it, the destitute artillery companies at present organized, (for a statement of the applications, see Table I.;) and are about half the number required to enable the department to furnish each company with a field-piece.

The return of field ordnance in the possession of artillery companies, (Table K.) may not be correct; but it is as perfect as it was possible to make it, from the few and imperfect returns received from commandants of companies, in compliance with the law on the subject.

The state fortifications on Staten Island remain in much the same situation as when I made my last annual report. In the hope that a sale of these extensive works would be made to the general government, no expense (of any amount) has been incurred upon them during the last two or three years. If they are to remain the property of the state, the walls of Fort Tompkins ought to be finished, or more permanent coverings erected to preserve them from dilapidation.

The duties required of the commissary-general, under the revised statutes (by the organization of artillery companies and corps, issues of ammunition, constant accession of arms, ordnance and other property,) have been so very much increased, that he submits, with great deference, to his excellency the Governor, and through him to the Legislature, his claim to an increase of salary, adequate to the services required of him, and of his responsibilities in the amount of property entrusted to his keeping.

Respectfully submitted,
ALEXANDER M. MUIR,
Commissary-General.

S. N. Y. Commissary-General's Office,
New-York, January 20, 1829.

L. The accompanying remarks.

Ordered, That the said report be referred to the committee on the militia and the public defence, and that the usual number of copies of the same be printed for the use of the legislature.

Three several messages from the Senate, delivered by their clerk, with the bills therein mentioned, were read, informing that they have passed the bill entitled "An act concerning jurors residing on the New-Stockbridge tract;" the bill entitled "An act concerning jurors and town-officers in the county of Steuben," and the bill entitled "An act authorising David Reeve to erect a dock in the town of Flushing;" in which bills they request the concurrence of this house.

The said bills were severally read the first time, and by unanimous consent were also read a second time, and the bill entitled "An act concerning jurors residing on the New-Stockbridge tract," was referred to a select committee, consisting of Mr. Savage, Mr. Eldridge and Mr. Williams; the bill entitled "An act concerning jurors and town-officers in the county of Steuben," was referred to a select committee, consisting of Mr. Graves, Mr. Fitch and Mr. Phœnix; and the bill entitled "An act authorising David Reeve to erect a dock in the town of Flushing," was referred to a select committee, consisting of Mr. Jones, Mr. Wyckoff and Mr. Williamson, severally to consider and report thereon.

The house then again resolved itself into a committee of the whole, on the bill entitled "An act relating to the purchase of lands from the First Christian and Orchard parties of the Oneida Indians;" and after some time spent thereon, Mr. Speaker resumed the chair, and Mr. Norton, from the said committee, reported, that the committee had gone through the said bill, made an amendment thereto, and agreed to the same; which he was directed to report to the house, and he read the report in his place, and delivered the same in at the table, where it was again read.

Ordered, That the said report be laid upon the table.

The house then resolved itself into a committee of the whole, on the bill entitled "An act to continue in force the act authorising Russel Atwater and his associates to erect a toll-bridge over the Black river;" and after some time spent thereon, Mr. Speaker resumed the chair, and Mr. P. C. Fuller, from the said committee, reported, that the committee had gone through the said bill, and agreed to the same without amendment; which he was directed to report to the house, and he read the report in his place, and delivered the same in at the table, where it was again read.

Ordered, That the said report be laid upon the table.

The house then resolved itself into a committee of the whole, on the bill entitled "An act to incorporate the Bakers' benefit society of the city of New-York;" and after some time spent thereon, Mr. Speaker resumed the chair, and Mr. Hazeltine, from the said committee, reported, that the committee had gone through the said bill, and agreed to the same without amendment; which he was directed to report to the house, and he read the report in his place, and delivered the same in at the table, where it was again read, and agreed to by the house.

Ordered, That the bill be engrossed.

The house then resolved itself into a committee of the whole, on the bill entitled "An act to authorise the overseers of the poor of the town of Saranac, to pay over certain monies in their hands to the commissioners of common schools in said town;" and after some time spent thereon, Mr. Speaker resumed the chair, and Mr. Myers, from the said committee, reported, that the committee had gone through the said bill, and agreed to the same without amendment; which he was directed to report to the house, and he read the report in his place, and delivered the same in at the table, where it was again read, and agreed to by the house.

Ordered, That the bill be engrossed.

And then the House adjourned until eleven o'clock to-morrow morning.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 28, 1829.

The House met pursuant to adjournment.

The petition of sundry inhabitants of the county of Yates, praying for a reduction of the compensation of brigade inspectors, was read, and referred to the committee on the militia and the public defence.

The petition of the trustees of the Literary union society of the town of Ellisburgh in the county of Jefferson, praying pecuniary aid from the state, was read, and referred to the committee on colleges, academies and common schools.

The petition of sundry inhabitants of the towns of Portland and Ripley in the county of Chautauque, praying for a division of those towns, and the erection of a new town from parts of the same, was read, and referred to the committee on the erection and division of towns and counties.

The remonstrance of sundry inhabitants of the town of Portland in the county of Chautauque, against the contemplated division of the towns of Portland and Ripley, was read, and referred to the committee on the erection and division of towns and counties.

Sundry petitions and documents relating to the extension of the charter of the Rensselaer bridge company, was read, and referred to the committee on the establishment and improvement of roads and bridges, and the incorporation of turnpike companies.

The petition of Nathan Underwood and others, of the town of Litchfield in the county of Herkimer, praying for the remission of interest on monies due by them to the state, on the purchase of lot number 64 in Freemason's patent, was read, and referred to the committee on claims.

The petition of Nicholas Mundy and Benjamin Smith, praying that they may be authorised to erect a dam across the Susquehannah river in the town of Tioga, was read, and referred to the committee on the establishment and improvement of roads and bridges, and the incorporation of turnpike companies.

Mr. Burt, from the committee on the establishment and improvement of roads and bridges, and the incorporation of turnpike companies, to which was referred the petition of Thomas Richards, praying for the passage of a law to authorise him to erect and maintain a dam in the Susquehannah river in the town of Union in the county of Broome, asked for leave to report by bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Burt, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act authorising Thomas Richards to erect a dam in the Susquehannah river;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Mann, from the committee on claims, to which was referred the petition and documents of Adonijah Carter, praying for pecuniary relief, reported:

That the petitioner sets forth, that in pursuance of the laws of the United States and this state, he was, in the year 1826, a member of an organized company of artillery, attached to the 62d regiment of the 27th brigade of the 18th division of the militia of this state: That on the 13th day of September in that year, he was duly ordered on militia duty, at a regimental review and inspection, in the township of Tully in said county: That while so on militia duty, and obeying the orders of his superior officers, and in the act of discharging a piece of field ordnance in pursuance of such orders legally given, the cartridge accidentally took fire and exploded; by which means the petitioner's eyes were so much injured, that he is in consequence thereof deprived of the faculty of sight, and the means of procuring a subsistence for himself and a helpless family.

The truth of all these representations is abundantly established, and their rehearsal cannot fail to excite the tender compassion of a humane community. While most civilized governments have cherished the policy of granting pecuniary rewards and bounties to those, and the representatives of those, who risk and sacrifice their lives in the actual defence of their country, as exciting to deeds of emulation and glory, and strengthening the bonds of allegiance, the committee are not aware that the same policy has obtained towards citizens who in yielding obedience to the laws without the liability to encounter extraordinary dangers, sustain personal injuries by accident or the want of precaution. The establishment of such a principle might lead to consequences which cannot be foreseen. Every citizen engaged in the execution of the laws, or discharging his duty to the state under his general obligations to obedience, and receiving accidental or designed injury in person or property, might claim reparation. The committee have been thus particular in stating the principles on which they have grounded their conclusion, in consequence of having been referred to a report of a select committee, concluding by asking leave to introduce a bill in the journal of the assembly, page 44, for the year 1827, on petition of Wylie Nichols praying for similar relief under similar circumstances, which elicited much discussion and excited general interest. Although the committee in common with their fellow citizens who have united with the petitioner in asking the interposition of the legislature, deeply sympathise in his misfortune, yet they believe that they would be wanting in the faithful discharge of public duty if they yielded to that sympathy. A majority of the committee have therefore directed their chairman to submit for the consideration of the house, the following resolution:

Resolved, That the prayer of the petitioner ought not to be granted.

Ordered, That the said report and resolution be laid upon the table.

Mr. Bradish, from the committee on public lands, to which was referred the petition of sundry inhabitants of Oneida Castleton, praying a re-appraisement of the lands in said village, purchased by them of the state, and that their debts on account of such purchases may be liquidated according to such re-appraisement, reported:

That upon an examination of this subject, it appears that the lands in question were appraised in 1815. That such appraisement constituted the minimum prices in the sale of these lands until the year 1827, but that the sales thereof were actually made at prices greatly above this appraisement. These sales were principally made in the year 1817 and 1821. It is alleged by the petitioners, and such appears to be the fact, that as well the appraisement of 1815, as the high prices at which these lands were sold, were greatly influenced by an expectation of certain important public improvements to be made at and near this village, which would render it a place of considerable business, and thereby greatly enhance the value of real estate therein. But that no such improvements have been made or attempted, but that their idea has been long since altogether abandondoned.

Disappointed therefore in their expectations, the purchasers of these lands did in 1822, present a memorial to the legislature upon the subject, praying relief. On the 20th of February, of that year, an act was passed granting Eliphalet Hotchkiss, one of the said memorialists, the relief then sought; and extending relief also to the other purchasers of those lands. By the provisions of the second section of that act, the debts of those purchasers were, upon certain conditions, to be reduced from the high prices at which the lands were purchased, to the prices at which they were appraised in 1815. And the purchasers on paying that sum, with interest thereon from the time of purchase, were to receive patents of the lands so purchased by them. It further appears that several of the lots, included in the survey and plan of this village, remained unsold; and others which had been sold were abandoned by the purchasers, and had reverted to the state. In consequence of the prospects of this place being greatly changed, it was found impossible to effect a sale of these remaining lots at their valuation of 1815. Under these circumstances, as remarks the surveyor-general in a report upon the subject, made by him to this house the 29th of March, 1828, the commissioners of the land office in 1827, directed a re-appraisement of the unsold lots, and ordered them to be advertised for sale at the minimum prices fixed by such valuation. The sale was held on the 25th of March, 1828, and the result shewed that the last valuation had been judiciously made. By comparing this second appraisement with that of 1815, according to which the minimum prices had been fixed at the former sales, it appears that the valuation of 1815 exceeds what is now considered the true value of these lands by from 250 to 300 per cent., and in some cases much more. Upon these grounds the present petitioners ask a re-appraisement of the lands in this village appraised in 1815, and purchased by them in conformity therewith; and that their debts to the state on account of such purchases may be adjusted according to such re-appraisement. Upon a view of the whole subject the committee while they recognise it as a sound general rule to hold all purchasers of public property at open sale, to great strictness in the performance of the conditions of their purchase, and would depart from this rule as rarely as possible, and only in very peculiar cases; and if the question were now an original one, they would feel a great difficulty on this occasion in departing from a rule they deem so salutary and so necessary to the preservation of the public interests. Yet considering that the state has already adopted a different course upon these subjects, and considering all the circumstances of the case in question; that the valuation of 1815 and the purchases made in conformity therewith, were based upon expected public improvements to be made at that place; that these improvements have not been made or attempted, but their idea altogether abandoned, and that the just expectations of the petitioners have been thereby greatly disappointed, the committee are unanimously of opinion, that the prayer of the petitioners is reasonable and just, and ought therefore to be granted. They have therefore prepared a bill accordingly, and directed their chairman to ask leave to introduce the same.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Bradish, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act authorising a re-appraisement of certain lands in Oneida Castleton, and for other purposes;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Dickson from the committee appointed pursuant to the 47th rule of this house, and to whom was referred the bill entitled "An act for the relief of the heirs of Christian Guthrie," to examine and report to the house, whether in their opinion the said bill comes within the 9th section of the seventh article of the amended constitution, reported:

That the said bill provides that the commissioners of the land-office shall cause letters patent to be issued to the heirs of the said Christian Guthrie, for six hundred acres of land in the township of Stirling, out of any lands heretofore set apart to satisfy claims for bounty lands, which still remain unappropriated. That it satisfactorily appears that the said Christian Guthrie was a soldier in captain Copp's company, in the first regiment in the New-York line, and was killed in battle near Monmouth, about the first of July, 1778. That he was returned as a dead soldier, and by the name of Christian Gutrick, and to this name lot number nine in Milton was granted. That by reason of such error in the name, the lot escheated to the state in 1820, from a supposed want of heirs. That the soldier returned as Christian Gutrick, was in fact Christian Guthrie, and brother of the persons to be benefitted by said bill; and that they are the heirs at law of the said deceased soldier, Christian Guthrie. That by acts and resolutions of the legislature, they were entitled to bounty lands.—The committee are therefore of opinion that the said heirs have a just claim on the state for said lands—that the grant of them is but the fulfilment of an imperious obligation; that, in the language of their late attorney-general, "the fulfilment of the obligations of the state, contracted by its laws, and the solemn resolutions of its legislature, cannot be considered as embraced within the spirit of that part of the constitution now in question. In such a case, the appropriation instead of being for private purposes, would be for one of the most important of public objects, the performance of an antecedent contract of the state." The committee are of opinion that the bill so referred to them, does not come within the 9th section of the seventh article of the constitution, and that they have directed their chairman to submit to the house the following resolution:

Resolved, That the assent of two-thirds of all the members elected to each branch of the legislature is not required to the passage of the bill entitled "An act for the relief of the heirs of Christian Guthrie."

Mr. Speaker put the question whether the house would agree to the said resolution, and it was determined in the affirmative.

Mr. Dickson, from the committee appointed pursuant to the 47th rule of this house, and to whom was referred the bill entitled "An act for the relief of Cornelius Higgins," to examine and report to the house, whether, in their opinion, the said bill comes within the 9th section of the 7th article of the amended constitution, reported:

That the said bill provides for the payment to the said Cornelius, of the sum of two hundred and fifty dollars, with interest from the 1st day of March in the year 1795, in full for services in building a block-house at Salina. That it appears from the petition of the said Cornelius Higgins, and the documents accompanying the same, that he was, in May or June 1794, employed by the agent or agents of this state, to erect the said block-house at Salina, for the benefit of the state; that he did, in the year 1794, build the same; and that it does not appear that he has ever received any compensation whatever for such labour and services.

The claim of the said Cornelius Higgins has been urged by him, and reported by successive committees as a just demand against the state. And the committee are constrained to say, that in their opinion, the said sum of two hundred and fifty dollars and interest, is justly due from the state to said Higgins: And that although the section of the constitution in question intended that a bare majority of the legislature should not be generous in the gratuitous appropriation of the public monies or property for local or private purposes, yet it never intended a bare majority should not be just in the appropriation of such monies or property in discharge of debts due from the state, where its responsibility, faith, and honour were pledged.

The committee are therefore of opinion, that the bill so referred to them does not come within the 9th section of the 7th article of the constitution; and they have directed their chairman to submit to the house the following resolution:

Resolved, That the assent of two-thirds of all the members elected to each branch of the legislature, is not requisite to the passage of the bill entitled "An act for the relief of Cornelius Higgins."

Mr. Speaker put the question whether the house would agree to the said resolution, and it was determined in the affirmative.

Mr. Jones, from the select committee to which was referred the engrossed bill from the Senate, entitled "An act authorising David Reeve to erect a dock in the town of Flushing," reported, that they have examined the said bill, and see no reason why the same should not be passed into a law.

Ordered, That the said bill be committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Graves, from the select committee to which was referred the engrossed bill from the Senate, entitled "An act concerning jurors and town-officers in the county of Steuben," reported, that they have examined the said bill, and see no reason why the same should not be passed into a law.

Ordered, That the said bill be committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Savage, from the select committee to which was referred the engrossed bill from the Senate, entitled "An act concerning jurors residing on the New-Stockbridge tract," reported, that they have examined the said bill, and see no reason why the same should not be passed into a law.

Ordered, That the said bill be committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. W. Hall, from the committee on engrossed bills, reported, that they have examined the engrossed bill entitled "An act authorising the overseers of the poor of the town of Saranac, to pay over certain monies in their hands to the commissioners of common schools in said town;" the engrossed bill entitled "An act to reduce the number of trustees of Fredonia academy in the county of Chautauque," and the engrossed bill entitled "An act to incorporate the Bakers' benefit society of the city of New-York;" and that the same are severally correctly engrossed.

The said engrossed bill, entitled "An act authorising the overseers of the poor of the town of Saranac, to pay over certain monies in their hands to the commissioners of common schools in said town," was read the third time.

Resolved, That the bill do pass.

Ordered, That the clerk deliver the said bill to the Senate, and request their concurrence in the same.

The said engrossed bill, entitled "An act to reduce the number of trustees of Fredonia academy in the county of Chautauque," was read the third time.

Mr. Speaker put the question whether the house would agree to the final passage of the said bill, and it was determined in the affirmative, two-thirds of all the members elected to this house voting in favor thereof, as follows, to wit:

Mr. Al Burtis, from the committee on the incorporation of charitable and religious societies, to which was referred the petition of Alexander Elston, William Hamilton and others, praying for the incorporation of the New-York African Clarkson Association, reported:

That it appears from the petition, that in the year 1825, several persons of color in the city of New-York associated themselves together for the benevolent purpose of raising funds to be exclusively used for the relief of widows and orphans of deceased members, the aid of the sick, and the burial of their dead, and for improvement in Literature; their number is about one hundred and fifty—that it would be increased, their funds enlarged, and the usefulness of the institution more generally felt and acknowledged, by an act of incorporation enabling them the better to carry into effect the object of their original association.

The committee are of opinion that every institution, which in its operation has for its object the alleviation of the miseries of the human family, it is right and proper to encourage; and especially a society of this unfortunate portion of our population; conceiving that by extending this relief to them, it may be a means of leading them to further pursuits of virtue and happiness, which will make them more valuable members of society. The committee are therefore in favor of the prayer of the petitioners. They have prepared a bill and directed their chairman to ask leave to introduce the same.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Al Burtis, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to incorporate the New-York African Clarkson association;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Armstrong, from the committee on the erection and division of towns and counties, to which was referred the petition of the commissioners of highways of the town of Leicester in the county of Livingston, reported:

That the petitioners set forth in their petition that considerable time has been spent, and much expense incurred by the inhabitants of the town of Leicester in the county of Livingston, and the towns of Perry and Castile in the county of Genesee, in endeavoring to ascertain the boundary line between said towns; yet no satisfactory line has been established. They therefore pray that three commissioners may be appointed to run and establish such line. The novel character of the application has induced the committee to give the subject a careful examination; and in referring to the revised statutes they find the boundaries of the town of Leicester so clearly designated that they think it scarcely possible for a dispute to arise, and as the inhabitants of the towns of Perry and Castile have not joined in the petition, the committee believe they have found a line that is satisfactory to them. The petitioners further pray that the commissioners so appointed may be authorised to lay out a public highway on said line, four rods wide. Although this part of the petition does not come strictly within the province of the committee, they have ventured to take it into consideration, and are of the opinion that ample provision is made for their wants in article four of title one of the sixteenth chapter of the first part of the revised statutes. They therefore recommend to the house the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the prayer of the petitioners ought not to be granted, and that they have leave to withdraw their petition.

Thereupon,

Mr. Speaker put the question whether the house would agree to the said resolution, and it was determined in the affirmative.

Mr. Dana, from the committee on the judiciary, to which was referred the petition of John Ridley of the city of New-York, praying for the passage of a law to authorise the administrators of Henry I. Moore deceased, to convey to him certain real estate therein named, asked leave to report by bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Dana, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to confirm a conveyance made by the administrators of Henry I. Moore, to John Ridley;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Dana, from the committee on courts of justice, to which was referred the petition of sundry inhabitants of the fourth ward of the city of Albany, praying relief from an assessment of taxes, reported:

That it appearst o the committee, that the Commercial Bank in the fourth ward of the city of Albany, was assessed in the year 1827 for the sum of $300,000, instead of the sum of $150,000. That by an act passed February 29th, 1828, the collector was directed to receive of the bank the tax upon $150,000, and return the residue of the said tax as a debt against the said ward. It is represented to the committee, that the supervisors of the county of Albany at their last annual meeting re-assessed the said returned tax upon the said fourth ward, thereby imposing a tax upon that ward on $150,000 more property than is contained in the ward, and reducing proportionally the county tax upon other parts of the county, and certain city taxes upon other parts of the city. The petitioners therefore pray that a law may be passed to relieve them from this extra taxation, which request appears to the committee to be reasonable, and they have accordingly prepared a bill, and instructed their chairman to ask leave to introduce the same.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Dana, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to relieve the fourth ward of the city of Albany from a certain tax;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Dana, from the committee on courts of justice, to which was referred the petition of John Cooper, praying for the passage of an act to require the clerk of the county of Dutchess to record a certain deed, reported:

That the petitioner represents that on the 1st of June, 1828, Peter Lossing and Catharine his wife, of the province of Upper Canada, executed a deed to him of land in the county of Dutchess in this state. James Mitchell, who describes himself as a judge of the district court in Canada, certifies that on the 28th day of the said month of June, Peter Lossing and his wife came before him, and duly acknowledged the execution of a certain deed, describing it by its date; and he further certifies as notary public, under his seal of office, that as a judge he is legally authorised to take the acknowledgment of deeds. The said certificate is not upon, nor attached to the deed, and it does not appear that at the time of making the acknowledgment the deed was present or shewn to the grantors, nor had the officer any authority by our laws to take the acknowledgement. To permit such a deed to be recorded would, in the opinion of the committee be highly improper. They have therefore directed their chairman to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the petitioner have leave to withdraw his petition and papers.

Thereupon,

Mr. Speaker put the question whether the house would agree to the said resolution, and it was determined in the affirmative.

Mr. Dana, from the select committee to which was referred the engrossed bill from the Senate, entitled "An act concerning the proof and acknowledgment of deeds," reported, that they have examined the said bill, and see no reason why the same should not be passed into a law.

Ordered, That the said bill be committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Norton, from the select committee to which was referred the petition of the supervisors of the county of Monroe, reported:

That they have been furnished with a copy of a resolution of the board of supervisors of said county, duly authenticated by the chairman and clerk of said board, directing them to petition the legislature in their behalf, to pass a law authorising said supervisors to sell the present court-house and lot on which the same is located, and to apply the proceeds thereof to pay the expenses of purchasing a site for a new court-house, and erecting the same, and towards building a jail for said county. That the reasons assigned, are, that the present court-house is not a commodious building, and was not very substantially built; that its location is so near the centre of business in the village of Rochester, as to cause frequent interruptions in the public business: That a new site, better adapted to the convenience of the citizens of said county, could be obtained at a price much less than the value of the present site; which would, from its contiguity to the business part of the village, sell for upwards of twenty thousand dollars; which, with $5000 raised upon the county by an act of this legislature, passed 21st April 1828, and the proceeds of the jail lot, directed to be sold by the same act, will be more than will be required to purchase a new site for a court-house and jail, and to build the same. All which the committee are satisfied is truly stated; and they have prepared a bill, and directed their chairman to ask for leave to introduce the same.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Norton, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to authorise the supervisors of the county of Monroe to sell the court-house and lot for the purposes therein mentioned, also to amend the act entitled 'An act to authorise the supervisors of the county of Monroe to build a gaol,' passed April 21st, 1828;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. W. Hall, from the committee on engrossed bills, reported, that they have examined the engrossed bill entitled "An act authorising the commissioners of loans of the county of Oneida to sell certain lands," and that the same is correctly engrossed.

The said engrossed bill, entitled "An act authorising the commissioners of loans of the county of Oneida to sell certain lands," was read the third time.

Resolved, That the bill do pass.

Ordered, That the clerk deliver the said bill to the Senate, and request their concurrence in the same.

Mr. W. Hall, from the committee on engrossed bills, reported, that they have examined the engrossed bill entitled "An act relative to Middlebury academy in the county of Genesee," and that the same is correctly engrossed.

The said engrossed bill, entitled "An act relative to Middlebury academy in the county of Genesee," was read the third time.

Mr. Speaker put the question whether the house would agree to the final passage of the said bill, and it was determined in the affirmative, two-thirds of all the members elected to this house voting in favor thereof, as follows, to wit:

The house then proceeded to the consideration of the report of the committee of the whole, on the bill entitled "An act to continue in force the act authorising Russel Atwater and his associates to erect a toll-bridge over the Black river;" the said report being, that the committee had gone through the said bill, and agreed to the same without amendment.

Mr. Speaker put the question whether the house would agree with the committee of the whole in their said report, and it was determined in the affirmative.

Ordered, That the bill be engrossed.

Ordered, That Mr. Sill have leave of absence for fourteen days, Mr. Al Burtis for twelve days, and Mr. Sloughter for five days.

A communication from Robert Snow, an inspector of pot and pearl ashes for the city and county of New-York, was read, in the words following, to wit:

TO THE HON. THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF NEW-YORK, IN SENATE AND ASSEMBLY CONVENED.

May it please your Honorable Body:

It is made my duty by law, to report annually to the legislature the quantity, and as near as may be the quality and value of the articles inspected by me during the year ending on the first of this present January, together with the amount of the fees and emoluments derived from my office. This I have faithfully done as per my report dated 22d instant. Being hurried to get said report in time for the steam-boat, I omitted the latter part of the clause on that subject, and now, if your honorable body pleases, I shall speak to that point.

Touching the value of pot and pearl ashes, I can say no more than what is weekly reported in the price current of this city. Ashes at present are, pots $150, and pearls $140 per ton of 2240 lbs. They are likely to continue at these prices, and perhaps to increase until fresh supplies arrive, as the quantity here is small—it may be not more than 3,500 to 4,000 bbls.—and growing smaller weekly. There could not have been many short of 20,000 bbls. at this time twelve months ago, perhaps the quantity was greater.

As to what ought to be done to improve the manufacture of pot and pearl ashes, little more can be said than to remark, that the best pot ashes are procured from clean house ashes, and the best pearl ashes is said to be obtained from field ashes, at least these are the whitest, and whiteness is judged to be one of the perfections of pearl ashes. But as every inspector will judge according to the best of his skill and knowledge of the article, it will be proper to remark that after we say to the manufacturer, keep away the salt and lime from the kettles in the making of pot ashes, we shall have said all that is requisite. But after all, one of the great secrets as regards the preservation of these articles, will be found in the quality of the barrels. If the barrels are not good, the ashes will not keep so as to appear well at a foreign market; nor will they indeed, be as good as when first put up, if the barrels are not what they ought to be; for every one acquainted with pot and pearl ashes knows, that from the moment they cool after having been manufactured, nature begins the work of deterioration. This is occasioned principally, if not altogether, by the attraction and absorption of the oxygen from the atmosphere with which the alkaline salt forms a great affinity. Here, if your honorable body pleases, a strict chemical process takes place, which tends eventually to neutralize the whole mass. If I am correct, it will be seen of how much consequence it is that the barrels be good. Oak barrels in all cases are best. The stuff ought to be seasoned, and if some way could be devised to reward those that furnished the best oak barrels, the interest of all concerned would be much promoted. Were it necessary, much more might be said; at present, perhaps, my duty leads me no farther.

All which is respectfully submitted,

ROBERT SNOW,
One of the Inspectors for the City of New-York.

New-York, January 21, 1829.

Sum total, 593,017 feet of different kinds, and I have charged for my fees for inspecting the same, $149.29.

All which is respectfully submitted by your humble servant,

ERASTUS SMITH.

Your subscriber would inquire if it would not be a good regulation to the lumber business, to have some law relative to the thickness of boards; for as boards often are not more than $\frac{3}{4}$ of an inch thick, yet the seller will claim that he is to be allowed full face measure, and receive pay for inch boards, when they are not more than $\frac{3}{4}$ of an inch, and sometimes not that thick. It is my opinion that unless the law is specified on that point, that justice cannot be done to the consumers, as the eastern boards have got to coming very thin. I would also mention, that the case has occurred a number of times within the last year of whole cargoes of pine and spruce timber being sold to lumber merchants in this place without being inspected, and was bought by them as such for this reason: because the assignees of lumber sent them from the eastward would not sell our lumber merchants the lumber, unless they would buy it at the mill mark, and without its being inspected here at all. The owners thereby save the inspection, and of course have no refuse in the whole cargo. Therefore the consumer, I think, has not a fair chance with the owner. In my opinion if this method is allowed to proceed without some limits, that in a few years there will be no want of inspectors.

Respectfully yours,

ERASTUS SMITH.

Inspector of Lumber for the County of Kings, State of New-York.

Brooklyn, January 26, 1829.

Ordered, That the same be laid upon the table.

The annual report of Benjamin Meeker, one of the inspectors of lumber for the county of Kings, was read, in the words following, to wit:

TO THE HONORABLE THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF NEW-YORK, IN SENATE AND ASSEMBLY CONVENED.

Benjamin Meeker, an inspector of lumber, appointed for the county of Kings, in the said state, and residing in the village of Brooklyn in the said county of Kings, in obedience to the statute in such case made and provided, respectfully reports:

That during the year last past, from January 1st, 1828, to January 1st, 1829, he has inspected and measured in the said county, the following quantities of lumber, to wit:

777,789 feet of merchantable dimension timber, pine and spruce.
180,021 feet of refuse dimension timber, pine and spruce.
25,364 feet of first quality white pine boards and plank.
13,257 feet of second quality white pine boards and plank.
17,882 feet of third quality white pine boards and plank.
11,537 feet of fourth quality white pine boards and plank.
2,129 feet of merchantable cedar boards.
3,305 feet of merchantable ash plank.
2,160 feet of refuse ash plank.
13,574 feet of merchantable oak plank.
1,756 feet of refuse oak plank.
1,749 feet of oak scantling.
1,960 feet of merchantable yellow pine boards.
3,438 feet of refuse yellow pine boards.

The value of the lumber inspected and measured by him as above set forth, this inspector is unable to state, in consequence of the purchasers refusing to give him any information on the subject, although requested by him to afford such information. The inspector would therefore only be able to afford your honorable body his own conjectures or estimate, which might be erroneous.

The said inspector further reports, that the amount of fees and emoluments derived from his said office for the year last past, to wit, from the said January 1st, 1828, to January 1st, 1829, is $274.46; and that all the said lumber so measured and inspected by him as aforesaid, was measured and inspected in the village of Brooklyn, in the said county of Kings. And that the said inspector is possessed of no information that may tend to the improvement of the quality, or the increase of the quantity of the articles subject to his inspection.

All which is respectfully submitted,

BENJAMIN MEEKER.

Dated Brooklyn, Kings County, Jan. 23, 4829.

The annual report of Charles Lemon, an inspector of lumber for the county of Rensselaer, was read, in the words following, to wit:

To the Honorable the Legislature of the State of New-York.

Agreeable to the Revised Statutes, chapter 17th, article 12th, section 185th, the undersigned, inspector of lumber for the city of Troy, begs leave to report:

That he has measured and inspected the following portions of lumber, since the 6th of May, until the 18th of December last past, viz:

Of pine lumber, 611,095 feet; of this, only 26,754 feet was of the first quality, worth $27 per M. Of cherry boards and plank, 26,754 feet, of middling quality, worth 30 dollars per M. Curled maple scantling, 6,252 feet, averaging 30 cents each, of 16 feet to a scantling. 606 feet of curled maple boards, good. Whitewood, one half inch thick, 4,137 feet, good, worth 15 dollars per M. Ash plank, 1,112 feet.

My fees on the above, $170.32.

All which is repectfully submitted,

CHARLES LEMON, Inspector.

Troy, January 26, 1829.

Remarks.—The first quality of lumber is measured face measure; but the second, third and fourth quality, is reduced by the inspector almost one quarter. Ought not the second, third and fourth to be measured face measure, as well as the first? for it is on the three last qualities the seller in the first instance is a heavy loser. I suppose the quality ought to be sufficient deduction, without reducing in the measurement also. There is very great complaint by those who bring lumber to market, on this account. I will state one instance. A boat-load of lumber was sent from Lysander, and measured by a man supposed to be very competent; but on being measured again in Troy, it fell short 7000 feet, to the damage of the shipper 100 dollars. And in order to increase the quantity, might not a law be passed to protect the seller in the first instance, by making four qualities, and to have them measured face measure; for the inspector who reduces the most in measuring, the buyer prefers him to measure.

Ordered, That the said report be laid upon the table.

Mr. Bostwick, declared to have been duly elected a member of this house in and for the county of Seneca, appeared in the Assembly chamber.

Ordered, That Mr. Edgerton and Mr. Efner attend with Mr. Bostwick before some proper officer, and see him duly qualified.

Mr. Edgerton reported, that pursuant to the order of the house, Mr. Efner and himself had attended with Mr. Bostwick before Azariah C. Flagg, secretary of state, and seen him duly qualified.

Ordered, That Mr. Bostwick do take his seat.

The house then again resolved itself into a committee of the whole, on the bill entitled "An act to lay out and improve a road through the Buffalo Indian reservation in the county of Erie;" and after some time spent thereon, Mr. Speaker resumed the chair, and Mr. Mandeville, from the said committee, reported progress, and asked for and obtained leave to sit again.

And then the House adjourned until eleven o'clock to-morrow morning.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 30, 1829.

Two several remonstrances of sundry inhabitants of the county of Broome, against the erection of a dam across the Susquehannah river at Billings' rift in the county of Tioga, were read, and referred to the committee on the establishment and improvement of roads and bridges, and the incorporation of turnpike companies.

Mr. Skinner, from the committee on colleges, academies and common schools, to which was referred the memorial of the trustees of the Rochester high school, reported:

That the said school was incorporated in the year 1827, and embraces two school districts in the village of Rochester. It appears from the memorial that the title to an acre of ground in said village, upon which there has been erected a large and valuable three story building, is vested in the said corporation. That the property is estimated to be worth from eight to ten thousand dollars, and is free from incumbrance. For the purpose of enabling them to finish the upper room of their building, and to pay the debts which have been incurred by the corporation, the trustees propose to loan of the state, the sum of two thousand five hundred dollars for five years, and to mortgage their property for security. It appears from the comptroller's report, that there is seventy thousand dollars of the common school fund now in the treasury uninvested and unproductive. The committee have reason to believe that the security offered is fully adequate for the payment of the money and the annual interest, and they have required the comptroller, in addition to the mortgage, to take a bond pledging the personal responsibility of the trustees, or such other persons as he shall deem sufficient to afford unquestionable security for the payment of the principal and interest.

Some of the committee have doubted the policy of loaning out this fund in such small sums, and especially of taking security upon a species of public property, which in case of the failure of payment the state might hesitate to divert from the useful purposes to which it is applied; but a majority of the committee are of opinion that the prayer of the petitioners ought to be granted, and have directed their chairman to ask leave to introduce a bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Skinner, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act authorising a loan to the Rochester high school;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Burt, from the committee on the establishment and improvement of roads and bridges, and the incorporation of turnpike companies, to which was referred the petition of the secretary of the Windham and Durham turnpike road company, and others, reported:

That the Windham and Durham turnpike road company was incorporated in the year 1809, for the purpose of constructing a road across the Catskill mountain in the county of Greene, the distance of ten miles, which they have faithfully performed, as appears by certificate to that effect. It is represented to the committee that the location of said road was an unfortunate one for the enterprise of the stockholders, and has been wholly unproductive, although they have continued to keep the same in repair for the space of twelve years, at the expense of twelve thousand dollars. The company are desirous of being relieved from that part of the said road situate in the town of Windham, in which application the inhabitants residing in the neighborhood join, and are willing that the company should be released from their obligations, and that the same may be declared a public highway. The committee believe, that in consideration of the small toll they have been enabled to collect, by not having the privilege of extending their road so as to intersect, in a direct line to some of the great thoroughfares leading to the Hudson river, such privileges should be extended to them to continue said road easterly, and intersect the Susquehannah turnpike in the town of Cairo, and erect two half toll gates thereon. This company is said to consist of but few members, and not very well able to bear the loss, and that public convenience would be realized by extending this relief, and the distance of their contemplated addition to the road will make the whole about twelve miles. The committee have given the subject that attention they believe necessary, to come to the conclusion that the application is reasonable, and recommend the passage of a law to that effect, and have prepared a bill and directed their chairman to ask leave to introduce the same.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Burt, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to amend the act, entitled 'An act to incorporate the Windham and Durham turnpike road company;'" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Savage, from the committee on grievances, to which was referred the petition of William Wisner, reported:

That on the 24th day of October. 1808, the petitioner executed a bond to the people of this state, as security for one Mathew Carpenter, in the penal sum of six thousand five hundred and ten dollars, conditioned that the said Mathew should faithfully apply all such monies as might come to his hands, as a commissioner to improve a certain road from Catskill to Catharine town in the county of Tioga, at which time the said Mathew, as the committee believe, was of high standing in the community as to property and character.

The first knowledge that the petitioner had of the non-performance of the condition of the bond, was on the 9th of May, 1820, when the petitioner was served with a capias, returnable in the then term of May—twelve years having elapsed since the execution of the bond; that though the said Mathew was solvent at the time of executing the said bond, and continued so for many years afterwards: yet at the time the said suit was brought he was much embarrassed, and that the attorney-general without the consent of the petitioner, stayed the proceeding on the suit against the said Mathew until the 24th day of March, 1824, when the legislature did, without the knowledge of the petitioner, pass a law authorising the comptroller to settle with the said Mathew upon equitable principles.

At this time the said Mathew was, as is believed, possessed of property to an amount more than sufficient to indemnify the petitioner. But soon after the passing of this law it went into the hands of his other creditors, and he is wholly unable to indemnify the petitioner. That after the passing of this law, to wit, on the 31st of August, 1825, the attorney-general did, without giving the petitioner notice, enter a judgment against the said Mathew and the petitioner, in the supreme court of this state, for the sum of one thousand six hundred and seventy dollars and three cents, with costs, which judgment is now in force against the petitioner.

From all these statements it appears to the committee, 1st, That if the state had not suffered the delinquency of the said Mathew to pass unnoticed for more than eight years, they might have collected their demand. 2d, That if the attorney-general had not delayed the said suit for several years after it was commenced, the petitioner might have indemnified himself out of the property of the said Mathew.

The petitioner feeling that the state has slept upon its right for many years, until the said Mathew has become insolvent, the security ought not any longer to be holden. And as it appears to the committee, and as they believe the petitioner is, in his circumstances, not able to discharge the said judgment, and having a large family dependant upon him for their support, and that he ought to be discharged from said judgment, and have directed their chairman to ask leave to introduce a bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Savage, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act for the relief of William Wisner;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. T. L. Smith, from the select committee to which was referred the petition of William Jauncey Thorn, and James Jauncey Thorn, of the city of New-York, reported:

That the petitioners are the near relatives of the late William Jauncey, of New-York, (deceased) who bequeathed by his last will and testament in due form of law, to said petitioners respectively, a large real and personal estate, and in and by which said will and testament the said William Jauncey declared that it was his most particular desire and injunction, that the petitioner, William Jauncey Thorn, designate himself William Jauncey, without any additional name, and that the petitioner James Jauncey Thorn, designate himself James Jauncey, without any additional name. The committee think that the prayer of the petitioners should be granted. They have prepared a bill accordingly, and have instructed their chairman to ask leave to introduce the same.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. T. L. Smith, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act changing the names of William Jauncey Thorn, and James Jauncey Thorn, of the city of New-York,;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Edgerton, from the committee on privileges and elections, to which was referred the petition of Harvey Granger, of the county of Saratoga, and the petition of sundry inhabitants of the town of Greenfield in said county, together with the accompanying documents, reported:

The committee, in the investigation of the subject committed to them, have endeavoured to bestow upon it that consideration which its merits so imperiously require. The petitioner, Harvey Granger, prays to be admitted to a seat in this house as a member of Assembly duly elected from the county of Saratoga. In assigning the cause why the petitioner should be entitled to a seat, he alleges that fraud or gross negligence is chargeable to the inspectors of elections in the town of Greenfield, in said county; and which, if not corrected, is calculated to destroy all confidence in the purity of elections and prostrate the sovereignty of the people.

The petitioner further states, that it will appear by the affidavits and documents presented with his petition, that at the late annual election held on the 3d, 4th and 5th days of November last, by the certified canvass of the votes of the town of Greenfield, by the inspectors of elections in said town, that Howel Gardner, the candidate for the office of elector for president and vice-president at said election in said town, received one hundred and eleven votes for said office. Whereas, by the affidavits of one hundred and seventy-two electors of that town, it appears that the said Howell Gardner received one hundered and seventy-two votes for the office of elector. From which facts the petitioner avers that it is manifest that the inspectors of said town have wickedly and corruptly taken from the ballot box appropriated for receiving the ballots of such elector, sixty-one votes; or they have so negligently and carelessly kept the said box as to suffer some other evil-minded and wicked citizen to perpetrate the said fraud, and prays that the same may be inquired into by this house.

Accompanying the petition is referred to the committee also the petition of twenty-eight of the inhabitants of the town of Greenfield, praying legislative inquiry as to the allegations stated by the petitioner. In support of these declarations and allegations of the petitioners, are presented the affidavits of one hundred and seventy-two persons, who swear positively to the fact, that they, at the late election in said town, voted for Howell Gardner for elector of president and vice-president. One hundred and fifty of the persons so sworn or affirmed, have subscribed and taken an oath or affirmation before Judiah Ellsworth, Esq. a commissioner, &c. in the words following, to wit:

Saratoga County, ss.

"The following persons whose names are hereunto subscribed, being severally sworn or affirmed, depose and say, that they did each one for himself during the election held in the town of Greenfield, in said county, on the 3d, 4th and 5th days of November last, present and deliver to the board of inspectors of said election, a paper ballot, containing the name of Howell Gardner, for elector, which said ballot was received by the said board to be inserted in the ballot box."

Of the residue of the 172 persons so sworn or affirmed, it appears that 14 of the number took and subscribed, before Charles Deake, Esq. a commissioner, &c., an oath or affirmation, of the import and substance as above recited; and several other affidavits taken before other individuals of the same amount.

From the state of the case here presented, the committee considered themselves imperiously required to apply to the house for power to send for persons and papers for a further investigation of the matter they had in charge. That power having been granted by the house to the committee, the chairman in pursuance of the order of the committee, issued a summons for each of the inspectors of elections in the town of Greenfield, viz. Jonathan Lapham, supervisor, Solomon Dake, town clerk, and Silas Gifford, Henry Miller and Adam Borkes, jun. assessors of said town. They also issued at the request of the delegation from the county of Saratoga, a like summons for Salmon Childs, Charles Deake, John Prior, Elihu Wing; and also issued, at the request of the petitioner a summons for Seth Hewit and Judiah Ellsworth, which was duly served by the sergeant-at-arms of this house. And in pursuance of the notice so given, each of the persons named in the summons, appeared before the committee, and were sworn and examined, except Seth Hewit, who attended but was not sworn or examined.

From the testimony of the inspectors, it fully appeared that the election in said town of Greenfield, was properly conducted. The inspectors uniformly stated, that the usual care was taken of the ballot boxes during each adjournment of the polls: That a slip of paper was fastened over the hole in the lid of the boxes, by wafers, and also over the key-hole, and that the boxes were returned at the opening of the polls after each adjournment in the same situation The inspectors also testified that two nights of the election the ballot boxes were kept by Solomon Dake, the town clerk, and the keys of the boxes kept by some one of the board. They also state, that one night during the election, the ballot boxes were kept by the supervisor, and the keys by one of the assessors. The supervisor testified, that during the night he had the custody of the boxes, they were locked up in a chest in the house in which he lives. Solomon Dake the town clerk, testified that the two nights the said ballot boxes were in his possession, they were kept in his store, set up on a shelf behind his counter, and his store locked by himself in the evening, the key taken into his dwelling house and hung up. And that during one or both of the evenings while the boxes were in his store, there were a number of people in and about his store on business, and that he was in and out of the store for short periods of time, and thinks it impossible for any one to have interfered, or meddled, or opened the said boxes without his knowledge. The town clerk also testified, that during the three days of election, he had a clerk who attended his store, but slept in his dwelling-house; and that on one of the mornings of the election, his clerk went to the store before him, and was opening the window shutters when he went to the store, and thinks he could not have been there more than five minutes before him. The boxes remained in the store each morning until he started for the election, and he was in and out every few minutes, and no one could have robbed the boxes without his knowledge. The clerk whom he employed during the election, stayed but four days; lives in the town, and is a young man of fair character and good reputation. The said town clerk further stated to the committee, that Alvah Dake, in his presence, said that the election in the town of Greenfield would be destroyed or set aside, and that he, the said Alvah Dake, would procure some one to vote twice, or get some illegal votes; and that he, the said Alvah Dake, would cause the said election to be lost; and that these threats were made before the election and during the time of the election; and that he, the town clerk, cautioned the board of inspectors to be careful, for such threats were made; and that they were more than usually careful in conducting the election in that town. The town clerk also testified, that a short time after the election, a number of persons were collected at his store, and a conversation was held upon the subject of the late election, and the loss of votes claimed for the Jackson elector. The ballot boxes were then in his store as they had been during the time he had held the office of town clerk, which was since April last; and after examining the locks to the ballot boxes, one key would open four of the boxes; that a part of the boxes were secured by a small chest or trunk lock, and the others by means of small brass pad-locks. He also stated that he had been in partnership with Alvah Dake the season past, in the store, but that they had dissolved, and had never had any difficulty, was no quarrel or ill will existing between them previous to this time to his knowledge. All the inspectors concur in opinion that the election was conducted with more than ordinary caution.

Salmon Childs testified that he is acquainted with all the inspectors of said town, and that they are entitled to the confidence of all who reside in that town, and that Solomon Dake, the town clerk, is an upright and industrious young man. Judge Childs testified that he had known most of the inspectors many years, and had perfect confidence in them all. He also stated that he was disappointed in the result of the election of the town of Greenfield, and that there was something mysterious about it, and that he thought the people there would not be satisfied with the result; but how it was he could not tell—did not think the electors had acted corruptly. He was the opposing candidate to Howell Gardner at the late election for elector, and attended, during the election, the most part of three days.

Elihu Wing testified that he saw the canvass of the votes of the town of Greenfield, and that the inspectors conducted fairly and honestly.

Charles Deake was also before the committee, and said, that he always had the utmost confidence in the board of inspectors of that town, but was dissatisfied with the result of the election in the town; and from the long acquaintance he had in the town, was fully convinced that more votes were given for Gardner than were canvassed. He had attended during the time the affidavits were taken before the commissioner, and had taken several himself; and knew that there must be fraud or corruption, or so many persons would not have sworn to the fact of voting for Gardner.

Judiah Ellsworth testified that he was the commissioner who took the affidavits of a large proportion of the persons who had sworn that they voted for Gardner at the election in Greenfield, and the manner in which he took them. Public notice was given in the newspapers in the county, that on some future day, a commissioner would attend in the town to take affidavits; that the several persons, before the oath was subscribed, had it read over to them, and they were separately asked if they could take and subscribe that oath? which they did voluntarily. No improper means was used to get them to swear. He was three days in the town taking the affidavits: went there at the request of several respectable individuals. Judge Childs attended a part of the time, and proposed to have the oath administered to persons, to make true answers to such questions as should be put to them, and to have them cross-examined; but he refused, and gave his opinion that it would take more time than would be necessary, and he should not be able to get through. Took the ages of the persons who were sworn. There were a number who could not write; and in every instance, but one, the person who gave the vote to such person at the election, was sworn, and testified that they saw such person deliver the ballot to the board of inspectors.

John Pettut testified that the character of the board of inspectors of the town of Greenfield, is established as honest and fine men.

Alvah Dake also testified to his testimony as taken down by one of the committee, marked No. 10, to which the house is referred. A large number of other affidavits, in their character various, and to the committee wholly irreconcileable, have been submitted, which are numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10 and 11.

The certificate of the town canvass has been furnished the committee, from which it appears, that Howell Gardner, at the late election in the town of Greenfield, received one hundred and eleven votes; to which certificate they beg leave to refer, marked No. 12. The official canvass, also, of the county, has been furnished the committee, marked No. 13, to which the committee beg leave also to refer the house.

The committee have had suggested to them, several expedients, to arrive at the truth in the investigation of this matter; but they could not be fully convinced as to their propriety. It has been suggested to the committee, to institute a commission to go into the town of Greenfield, to take the deposition of all the voters in said town. The committee, however, thought this course objectionable. It has also been under consideration before the committee, whether they would allow evidence to come before them to impeach the credibility of the affidavits submitted, inasmuch as that course would involve a protracted and irritating inquiry as to the credibility of the witnesses who have been adduced by both parties. And as the technical rules of legal evidence are extremely perplexing in an investigation of this description, to refuse to hear any evidence that might be offered, would be a denial of justice to the parties interested.

The committee have gone thus far, in giving a concise view of the features of the case about to come before the house.

They cannot, however, forbear to remark, that they have earnestly labored to look at the subject before them, divested of all its party coloring, and stript of all its extraneous circumstances. They are aware that feelings of a nature not the best caculated to develope the real merits of the question in issue between the petitioner and those accused, may have had an influence in forming a judgment; but if such feelings have existed, the committee are unconscious of their bias or control on this occasion. What, then, is the point in issue? A highly respected and respectable citizen, charges the inspectors of an election equally respected and respectable, with fraud, corruption or gross negligence in the discharge of important, solemn official duty. Nothing less is involved in this question, than the purity of our elections, or the final and fatal overthrow of all that is valuable and all that is dear to the heart of a freeman in this great, this prosperous and happy republic. If the choice of our rulers is to be arrested from us by the corruption of our inspectors of elections at the ballot boxes, well may we be alarmed; and as sentinels and as guardians of the birthright for which our fathers pledged before the world, their "lives, their fortunes and their sacred honors," we are bound to take warning. If, on the other hand, the character, the integrity, the purity of our public officers is to be assailed by the rude assaults of party animosity and political strife, then farewell to our boasted institutions, our civil rights, if not summarily and speedily redressed. No reprehension can be too severe, and scarcely any punishment too rigorous, if the inspectors of this board of election are guilty of that with which they are charged. No sentence within the range of our penal code, would scarcely be too hard for men who would conspire to destroy the character of this board of inspectors, by asserting that to be true which they knew to be false, while in the discharge of official duty.

The committee have found great embarrassment in attempting to arrive at reasonable certainty upon the case before them. From the peculiar nature of the points in issue, and being without example or precedent to guide them in their labors, as far as legislative authority is concerned, they have hesitated, and have forborne to express their own opinions but with extreme diffidence. Will corruption, if brought home to one box in the election in question, vitiate and destroy the remaining ballots found in other boxes, when all are included in the same certificate of the inspectors? The committee are aware that a sort of legal maxim exists, that bad in part, bad as a whole. Has this house the authority to invalidate the election of a member of this house, because improper conduct or corruption has tainted the election of another and distinct officer of the government, although voted for at the same election? Would corruption in an election of a justice of the peace at the election in question, have deprived a member of this house of a seat here, who held the official certificate, had such corruption, fraud or gross negligence been proved beyond the power of contradiction? These, and many other questions of a similar nature and like import, every member of the house will readily perceive, can be put.

From the detail of the evidence, a subject of all-pervading interest in an elective government, it appears that the oaths of more than sixty witnesses contradict the certificate of the inspectors, as to a part of the facts attested by that certificate. If this great number of witnesses inform the committee truly, it will at least give the character of direct falsity to some parts of the certificate, and of doubtful certainty to all the rest of it; and places the evidence to be derived from that certificate, in a situation similar, in the opinion of the committee, to that of a witness in a court of justice, who should testify to several material facts, on one of which material points, his testimony should be fully proved to be wholly destitute of truth. In the absence of all other evidence, a court of justice, as the committee apprehend, would not permit the rights and interests of a party to be affected or compromitted by testimony so tainted and invalidated, especially if that departure from truth be of such a complexion as to evince design and impure intention. The inspectors have been allowed, and that too very properly, by the committee, when their official acts were directly drawn in question, to purge themselves and their own conduct, by their own testimony, subject, however, in the opinion of the committee, to the caution which should attend the reception of testimony or evidence from such a quarter. And it is to be observed, that the scope of their testimony is directed to the exclusion of the fact; that their certificate contains any thing but the real truth, and particularly denies that any person or persons but themselves, or one or more of them, could have the means of altering the ballots in the boxes. The town clerk particularly states, that he heard (before the election) threats of destroying the election of that town—extraordinary as it might seem, that any person of sane intellect, should deal in such threats, as all such threats must have lacked power to change ballots in the ballot boxes, honestly, safely and exclusively kept by the inspectors themselves, and that, too, while they had the power to determine what ballots should be received.

This part of the testimony might well have suggested the reflection to the committee, that it is well adapted to provide a coloring for the serious apprehensions as to the nature of the events that have alarmingly happened, if we give credit to the sixty witnesses to the fact that the ballot boxes were rifled of their contents. Words alone, without the use of more prevailing and seducing means, could never open the ballot boxes, or change the contents. And yet this has been done, provided the testimony of more than sixty electors of that town may be safely credited.

Again: The committee will observe, that the investigations which have been had; the collection of the evidence, and the proceedings in the town to present the case to this house, have been open and public, with previous notice in the public newspapers, thereby affording opportunity to discredit or throw doubts on the testimony of the electors who stand arrayed by their oaths against the inspectors. Opportunity, however, will be afforded, the committee hope, (if such is wanted and can be had,) to invalidate their testimony or destroy their credibility, if practicable, and put this subject in its true light.

The case is peculiar, as the committee have before remarked, and is distinguished, in its leading features, from any other that has ever come before this house. If there is wrong here, it is wrong by design, and can scarcely be attributed to accident, mistake or honest error of judgment. Whether it is within the province of the committee to look for or designate the persons or person who have done the alleged mischief, and committed so flagrant an outrage upon the rights of electors, which, if tolerated, or permitted to escape the most rigorous reprehension within the power of the house, would endanger the whole fabric of elective government, and strike a deadly blow at the most sacred rights of a free people, is what the house must determine. Fraud, or even uncertainty in the returns of elections, is death to the liberties of our constituents.

If the canvass of the votes in the town in question, is deprived of the certainty which the inspectors' certificate imports, the committee know of no mode within the constitutional power of this house, to restore it to certainty. But we can so far protect the purity of our own body, as to permit no seat therein to be holden, on the strength of a certificate that is false or fraudulent in whole or in part; and if a certificate is found to be false in part, it would be unreasonable to presume, without some redeeming certainty, that it is true in the other part. If there is fraud, corruption or gross negligence in the ballot box in question, it would taint the whole election of the town; and the gangrene limb must be amputated, and to be effectual, it must be entire. The example and tendency of giving credit to a false certificate, would be more dangerous, in the opinion of the committee, to the rights of suffrage, than its total rejection.

Amid the regrets occasioned by the painful duty imposed upon the committee, of considering even a supposed case of fraud and corruption, at all, they find a consolation in its happening at a time when (as far as this house is concerned) no object can be derived or aimed at, but a faithful support of the great principles on which depend the safety of all our rights and institutions.

In conclusion, the committee feel compelled to entreat the pardon of this house, for the great length of their report: which nothing but the magnitude of the question involved could have justified. It, however, is due to the house to state, that the committee are not unanimous in the resolutions which they now submit to the house.

Resolved, (as the sense of this house,) That they are satisfied that fraud or corruption has been practised upon the ballot box for elector and member of congress, at the late election in the town of Greenfield, in the county of Saratoga; but they have not conclusive evidence that such fraud or corruption was practised by the consent or with the knowledge of the board of inspectors of said town.

Resolved, (as the sense of this house,) That the election in the town of Greenfield is void and of no effect, and that the prayer of the petitioners ought to be granted.

[For the Documents alluded to in this Report, see Appendix C.]

Ordered, That the said report and resolutions be committed to a committee of the whole house.

Ordered, That the usual number of copies of the same be printed for the use of the legislature.

Mr. Dana, from the committee on courts of justice, to which was referred the petition of Hoel Stevens and Betsey Hurlburt, reported:

That the petitioners represent that Ashbel Hurlburt, late of the state of Vermont, died seized of about one hundred and seventy-nine acres of land, in the county of St. Lawrence in this state, leaving a widow, (the petitioner Betsey Hurlburt) and three minor children: That the timber growing on the said land, which constitutes a considerable part of its value, is subject to the depredations of trespassers, and that the interest of the said children requires that the said land should be sold, and requesting the passage of an act to authorise the petitioners to sell the same under such restrictions as may be necessary to secure the interests of the said children.

By an act of the legislature, passed 24th March, 1815, ample power is given to the chancellor to order sales in such cases, which power has since been extended to circuit judges.

As a court of equity is peculiarly qualified to ascertain the facts and guard the rights of these children, the committee deem it proper to refer the petitioners to that tribunal, and they have therefore directed their chairman to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the petitioners have leave to withdraw their petition.

Thereupon,

Mr. Speaker put the question whether the house would agree to the said resolution, and it was determined in the affirmative.

Mr. Armstrong, from the committee on the erection and division of towns and counties, to which was referred the petition of the inhabitants of the town of Ossian in the county of Allegany, reported:

The petitioners represent that they are located nigher to Genesco the seat of justice in Livingston county, than to Angelica the seat of justice in Allegany county, and that it would be a great convenience to them to be annexed to the county of Livingston. It was also represented to the committee that the county of Allegany is indebted in the sum of six thousand dollars, which sum was expended in building a court-house and fire proof clerk's office, and in the improvement of roads in said county, five hundred dollars of which was expended in the town of Ossian; which moneys have now become due, and are about to be levied on said county.

The committee are aware, that in the alteration of county lines, a due regard ought to be paid to the interest and convenience of all who are to be affected by such alteration; and in arriving to the conclusion to which the committee have come, they have endeavored to keep this principle in view. The committee are of the opinion, from the facts before them, that it is more of an object with the petitioners to evade the payment of their proportion of six thousand dollars, than to be located nigher to the seat of justice. The committee believe that it would be manifest injustice to set off the town of Ossian, and thereby exempt it from the payment of its proportion of monies in which it had so largely participated. They therefore recommend to the house the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the petitioners have leave to withdraw their petition.

Thereupon,

Mr. Speaker put the question whether the house would agree to the said resolution, and it was determined in the affirmative.

Mr. Mann, from the committee on claims, to which was referred the petition of Orson Smith and others, of the county of Berkshire in the state of Massachusetts, praying for the passage of a law to grant to them certain bounty lands, asked for leave to report by bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Mann, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of David Smith, deceased;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Mann, from the committee on claims, to which was referred the petition of Nathan Underwood and others, of the town of Litchfield in the county of Herkimer, praying that the interest on certain monies due to the state may be remitted, asked for leave to report by bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Mann, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Nathan Underwood;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Hubbell, from the select committee to which was referred sundry petitions of members of the bar, and others, inhabitants of the two western districts of this state, praying for the establishment of a supreme court clerk's office at the village of Canandaigua in the county of Ontario, reported:

That the petitioners represent, that their great distance from any office of a clerk of the supreme court, renders their communication with such office always slow and expensive, and frequently subjects them to very serious inconvenience and losses, when immediate reference to the public records becomes necessary. They therefore pray that an act may be passed, directing the appointment of a clerk of the supreme court, with an office to be kept at the village of Canandaigua in the county of Ontario.

The committee have enquired, as far as they have been able, into the merits of this application, and beg leave to state the following facts in relation to the same:

Previous to the year 1807, there were but two clerk's offices of the supreme court, one in the city of New-York and one in the city of Albany, where the terms of the court were then held. In the year 1807, an act was passed, authorising the appointment of a third clerk, with an office at Utica in the county of Oneida. And by an act passed in the year 1820, the sheriffs of all the counties west of and including the counties of Chenango, Herkimer, Lewis and St. Lawrence, are directed to return process issuing out of the supreme court, to the clerk's office at Utica. These counties so enumerated, from their geographical situation, would naturally have recourse to the office at Utica, as the nearest and most easy of access, until one farther west should be established; and it was for the accommodation of these counties, that the office at Utica was originally established.

It appears that in the year 1807, from the best calculation which can be made from the preceding and succeeding census, the whole of the western counties so to be accommodated by the office at Utica, contained a population of one hundred and ninety-six thousand six hundred and thirty. The same counties, by the census of 1825, contained seven hundred and sixty-eight thousand three hundred and eleven inhabitants; and at the present time, the number must considerably exceed eight hundred thousand, or nearly one half of the population of the whole state.

A clerk's office at Canandaigua, would naturally be resorted to by the inhabitants of the counties of Chautauque, Cattaraugus, Erie, Niagara, Orleans, Genesee, Allegany, Livingston, Monroe, Ontario, Steuben, Yates, Seneca and Cayuga, and probably by some still farther east, as being more convenient than the office at Utica. And the counties last enumerated contained, by the census of 1825, three hundred and seventy-three thousand seven hundred and nineteen inhabitants; at present the number is over four hundred thousand, and is very rapidly increasing.

It is a fact so well known, that it may be superfluous for the committee to state, that applications to the supreme court clerk's office are frequently and necessarily made, not only by attorneys in the regular prosecution of suits, but by every man who takes a conveyance of real estate, and wishes to be assured that he is receiving a title free from incumbrance; a variety of other cases also require a resort to the records of the court. And some idea may be formed of the very frequent applications to the clerk's office which are necessarily made by practising attorneys and sheriffs, from the fact, that in prosecuting and collecting by execution a note in the simplest and shortest method, it becomes necessary to apply to the clerk at least ten times; the distance of an office, therefore, becomes a very serious consideration. By establishing the proposed office at Canandaigua, a distance of about 180 miles on an average in going and returning, will be saved, in every time it becomes necessary for any of the inhabitants of the counties named to send to the office; and all who reside as far west as Canandaigua, will, in each such application, save the distance of 224 miles, the latter place being 112 miles west of Utica.

An accommodation so much needed, is not now for the first time asked for by the petitioners. It appears that in the year 1820, petitions for the same object were presented to the Honorable the Senate; and a bill granting the prayer of the petitioners, was passed by that body in committee of the whole, but was finally lost; the proceedings on which may be found in the Journals of the Senate for that year, at page 223, &c. From that time to this, the application has been at different times renewed, and hitherto without success.

The committee have directed their inquiries to one point farther; and without going into detail at present, they report that they are satisfied that there would be a sufficiency of business done at the proposed office, to make it an inducement to a competent and fit person to take the appointment, the fees remaining the same as they now are, without any expense to the state for his salary or disbursements. And at the same time, a population of 400,000 will remain in the counties which will continue to resort to the clerk's office at Utica; so that no injustice will be done to the clerk at that place.

As to the particular location of the office at the place proposed in the petitions, it is proper to state, that the village of Canandaigua is as nearly central to the population to be accommodated, as any village that could be selected. It is the place where the circuit courts, the court of equity, and the county courts are regularly held: It is situated on the road which is the greatest thoroughfare of the west, passing through the middle tier of counties: And in regard to the post-office, it is not only a distributing office, but from this point the mail is carried twice every day by stages in a northwesterly direction, by the way of Rochester, to Lockport and Lewiston; three times a day to Buffalo, by the way of Batavia; once every day, by a more southerly route through the south part of Genesee county, to Buffalo; once every day, by the way of Geneseo, to Allegany, &c.; once every day, south to Steuben county; once every day, southeast through Yates county, &c.; once every day, north through the county of Wayne, &c.; and three times every day east, besides several smaller mails in different directions. This place seems therefore to be strongly indicated as the proper location for the proposed office, and no other place has been in any manner proposed to the committee.

In view of the whole subject, the committee think a public accommodation of so much importance to a growing population already consisting of upwards of 400,000, which can be granted without any public expense, and without any serious individual sacrifice, ought not to be withheld, but that the prayer of the petitioners ought to be granted. They have therefore instructed their chairman to ask leave to bring in a bill accordingly.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Hubbell, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act for establishing a clerk's office of the supreme court in the village of Canandaigua, in the county of Ontario;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Ordered, That the usual number of copies of the said bill and report be printed for the use of the legislature.

Mr. Titus, from the select committee to which was referred the memorial of sundry inhabitants of the city of New-York and of the county of Ontario, relative to the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia, reported:

That they have given said memorials all the consideration which the importance of the subject requires; and have reason to believe that a vast majority of the citizens of the non-slaveholding states, have for a long time regarded the existence of slavery in that district of our country, as entirely inconsistent with our national character and our republican professions and institutions. This fact must be obvious to every man who reflects how explicitly and solemnly it is set forth in the preamble of our charter of independence—that all men are created equal—that they are endowed by their creator with certain unalienable rights—and that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuits of happiness. The committee cannot but view with astonishment, that in the very Capital of this free and enlightened country, laws should exist by which the free citizens of a state are liable, without trial, and even without the imputation of a crime, to be seized while prosecuting their lawful business, immured in prison, and though free, unless claimed as a slave, to be sold as such for the payment of jail fees.

Many of our coloured people are employed in various capacities on board of our merchant vessels: in these they are carried up the Potomac; and when, as is not unfrequently the case, they are discharged within the District of Columbia, they are frequently seized, imprisoned, advertised and sold.

That sacred spot, consecrated as it were to freedom, by being set apart as the seat of the national government, and the site of the great national temple of liberty, should be entirely clear of this stigma.

The committee would respectfully suggest that a resolution, calling the attention of our senators and representatives in congress, to this subject, would likely be a help in removing slavery from that district.

The committee have directed their chairman to bring in a resolution for the consideration of the house, to that effect.

Resolved, (if the Senate concur herein,) That the senators of this state in the congress of the United States, be and are hereby instructed, and the representatives of this state are requested, to make every proper exertion to effect the passage of a law for the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia.

Ordered, That the said report and resolution be committed to a committee of the whole house.

Ordered, That the usual number of copies of the same be printed for the use of the legislature.

Mr. Arnold, from the select committee to which was referred the bill entitled "An act exempting persons employed as clerks in post-offices, from militia duty," reported, that the committee have had the said bill under consideration, and with the amendments therewith submitted, recommend that the same be passed into a law.

Ordered, That the said bill and amendments be recommitted to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. W. Hall, from the committee on engrossed bills, reported, that they have examined the engrossed bill entitled "An act to continue in force the act authorising Russel Atwater and his associates to erect a toll-bridge over the Black river," and that the same is correctly engrossed.

The said engrossed bill, entitled "An act to continue in force the act authorising Russel Atwater and his associates to erect a toll-bridge over the Black river," was read the third time.

Resolved, That the bill do pass.

Ordered, That the clerk deliver the said bill to the Senate, and request their concurrence in the same.

Ordered, That Mr. Young have leave of absence for four days, and Mr. Wheeler for three days.

Ordered, That the committee on the establishment and improvement of roads and bridges, and the incorporation of turnpike companies, be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Wessel and George Ten Broeck, and that the same be referred to the committee on grievances.

Mr. Dyckman gave notice that he would, on some future day, ask leave to introduce a bill in relation to the appointment of public notaries, commissioners of deeds, masters in chancery and examiners in chancery, in the city of New-York.

The house then proceeded to the consideration of the report of the committee of the whole, on the bill entitled "An act relating to the purchase of lands from the First Christian and Orchard parties of the Oneida Indians;" the said report being, that the committee had gone through the said bill, made amendments thereto, and agreed to the same.

Thereupon,

The report of the committee of the whole being further amended by the house,

Mr. Speaker put the question whether the house would agree with the committee of the whole in their report as amended, and it was determined in the affirmative.

Ordered, That the bill be engrossed.

The house then proceeded to the consideration of the amendments of the Senate to the bill entitled "An act for the relief of Francis Wilkinson and others;" one of the said amendments being to alter the title to "An act for the relief of the heirs of John Wilkinson."

The said bill and amendments were read; and the amendments having been again read, Mr. Speaker put the question whether the house would agree to concur with the Senate in their amendments to the said bill, and it was determined in the affirmative, two-thirds of all the members elected to this house voting in favor thereof, as follows, to wit:

A communication from the comptroller was read, in the words following, to wit:

The comptroller, to whom was referred by the honorable the assembly, the petition of William Williams, receiver of the Bank of Niagara, relative to the claim of the state against the said bank, and the property which has been assigned, and the collateral security given by the bank therefor, respectfully reports:

That on the 26th of January, 1825, the senate passed a resolution calling upon the comptroller to furnish that house with a statement of the debt against the bank, and of the collateral security that was given for it, with all the circumstances relating thereto. On the 28th of the same month the comptroller made a full report on all the matters embraced in the resolution. This report will be found in the journal of the senate of 1825, page 96. The information set forth in it relative to the collateral security, the circumstances under which it was given, and the proceedings on the part of the state in relation to it, as they had transpired at the date of that report, are fully detailed therein. At the session of the legislature in 1827, the president, directors and company of the Bank of Niagara presented a memorial to the legislature on the same subject, to which the petition of the receiver relates. On the 12th of January, (see journals of the assembly of 1827, pages 178–9, &c.) the comptroller made a further report on the same subject. This report and the former one contain all information that this department affords.

The comptroller is not aware that any thing has taken place since the last report, to change the character of this demand of the state.

Respectfully submitted,

PHILIP PHELPS.

Acting Comptroller.

Ordered, That the said communication be laid upon the table.

A message from the Senate, delivered by their clerk, with the bill therein mentioned, was read, informing that they have passed the bill entitled "An act to divide the town of Camillus, in the county of Onondaga;" in which bill they request the concurrence of this house.

The said bill was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and referred to a select committee, consisting of the members attending this house from the county of Onondaga, to consider and report thereon.

The house then again resolved itself into a committee of the whole, on the bill entitled "An act to lay out and improve a road through the Buffalo Indian reservation in the county of Erie;" and after some time spent thereon, Mr. Speaker resumed the chair, and Mr. Mandeville, from the said committee, reported, that the committee had gone through the said bill, made sundry amendments thereto, and agreed to the same; which he was directed to report to the house, and he read the report in his place, and delivered the same in at the table, where it was again read, and agreed to by the house.

Ordered, That the bill be engrossed.

The house then resolved itself into a committee of the whole, on the bill entitled "An act authorising the construction of the Chenango canal;" and after some time spent thereon, Mr. Speaker resumed the chair, and Mr. J. Van Beuren, from the said committee, reported progress, and asked for and obtained leave to sit again.

And then the House adjourned until eleven o'clock to-morrow morning.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 31, 1829.

The House met pursuant to adjournment.

The petition of Huldah Moger, the heir at law of Joseph Hubbard, praying for a grant of land for revolutionary services alleged to have been rendered by the said Hubbard, was read, and referred to the committee on claims.

The memorial of sundry inhabitants of the county of Otsego, praying for the incorporation of a company for the purpose of improving the navigation of the Susquehannah and Chemung rivers, was read, and referred to the select committee upon that subject, of which Mr. Mann is chairman.

The petition of the president, directors and company of the Fulton Bank, praying for an amendment of their charter, was read, and referred to the committee on the incorporation and alteration of the charters of banking and insurance companies.

The petition of sundry inhabitants of the counties of Tioga, Steuben, Yates, Ontario, Tompkins and Seneca, praying for the passage of an act authorising the construction of the Chemung canal, was read, and referred to the committee on canals and internal improvements.

Mr. Matthews, from the committee on the manufacture of salt, asked for leave to report by bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Matthews, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act in relation to the salt manufacturing lots in the town of Salina, and for other purposes;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Ordered, That the usual number of copies of the said bill be printed for the use of the legislature.

Mr. Savage, from the committee on grievances, to which was referred the petition of John I. Van Alen, agent and secretary of the Beaver manufacturing company, reported:

That the petitioner, together with Abraham I. Van Alen, Adam Van Alstyne and John Stephenson, all of Kinderhook, have caused themselves to be incorporated under the general law of this state, for the purpose of manufacturing cotton goods, by the name of the "Beaver Company," with a capital of one hundred thousand dollars: That about fifty thousand dollars of the capital has been actually paid in; and the whole of the monies so paid in, were invested in buildings, erections and machinery, on the Kinderhook creek, where the petitioner and his associates have for some time past actively carried on the business of their incorporation.

The petitioner represents, that on the morning of the 11th of April 1828, the main factory was discovered to be on fire; and notwithstanding every effort to prevent such a result, all the buildings, with the machinery, and a large quantity of stock and cloth, and yarn partly manufactured, were wholly destroyed.

It is further represented, that the loss sustained is, at the lowest calculation, at least thirty-five thousand dollars, of which only nine thousand dollars were insured.

And the petitioner further states, that the said establishment being owned by only four persons, and one of them owning only one thirty-second part, he and his associates cannot rebuild the same, unless they can obtain a large loan upon a liberal credit: That they can furnish to the state satisfactory security for the repayment of any monies that may be loaned to them for the purpose aforesaid.

The petitioners therefore pray that a law may be passed, authorising a loan of fifteen thousand dollars for seven years, out of monies in the treasury belonging to the school fund, with interest at the rate of seven per cent per annum.

From information derived from gentlemen acquainted with the petitioners, the committee are satisfied that the petitioners are men of fair characters, and active and useful members of society.

The committee will not go into a detailed statement of the reasons which induce them to recommend to the legislature the passage of a law for the relief of the petitioners. It is sufficient to call the attention of the house to the kind and fostering care which this state has always had over our manufacturing interest; and not doubting, that in a case like the present, when a few worthy individuals have sustained serious losses, that the same liberality which has been extended to the important interest of manufacturers, will be meted out to the petitioners.

If it were necessary, the committee might also refer to the liberality and munificence of the state, in the respective loans to the Delaware and Hudson canal company, of the year 1828, and to a loan to the county of Erie, of the present session; and might reason from analogy, that if it is correct to loan to private companies, and to counties, for praiseworthy and useful improvements, it is, to say the least of it, equally correct to extend that credit to private citizens, laboring under losses sustained, not by their own negligence, but by the act of God, especially as in both cases abundant security is offered.

The committee have come to the conclusion, that the prayer of the petitioners is reasonable; and have directed their chairman to introduce a bill, authorising the aforesaid loan to the petitioners, on receiving security to be approved of by the comptroller; and which he now asks leave to introduce.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Savage, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act authorising a loan to John I. Van Alen and his associates;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Ordered, That the usual number of copies of the said bill and report be printed for the use of the legislature.

Mr. Brinkerhoff, from the committee on the militia, to which was referred the petition of Victor Putnam and others, inhabitants of the county of Yates, praying for a reduction of the compensation allowed by law to brigade inspectors, reported:

That the compensation allowed by law to brigade inspectors, is, for inspecting a regiment or separate battalion, six dollars; for attending each parade of commissioned, non-commissioned officers and musicians, which he is required by law to attend, six dollars; and for making and transmitting to the adjutant-general, an inspection return of his brigade, six dollars.

The committee are aware, that on first thought, this seems to be rather an extravagant compensation: But when it is considered, that this is a very important office in the militia; that the law makes it an imperative duty on him, twice in each year, to make a military tour through his brigade, to attend the officer drills, and inspect the several regiments; and also to make and transmit to the adjutant-general, an annual brigade inspection return; is more burthensome, in the opinion of the committee, than it is supposed to be by the petitioners.

In several brigades where the population is dense, the local boundaries and beats of the several regiments is such, that the inspector may, without much inconvenience, attend the officer drills, and take the inspection of the different regiments in succession each day, until he shall have completed the whole of his tour.

The committee are, however, sensible that this remark will not apply to a great number of the brigades in this state. In many places, the officer drills and regimental inspections are so far distant from each other, that there has to be an intermediate day between each parade day, to allow the inspector time to travel from the one place of parade to the other; and it must be obvious to every one, that the expense of travelling on these intermediate days, (for which he receives no compensation,) cannot fall much short of the necessary expenses on actual parade days.

And considering also the requisite qualifications necessary for a full discharge of the duties of this office—that the inspector has generally to leave home one day before, and is not able to return till the day after he shall have completed his inspections, besides the necessary intermediate days, for all of which he receives no pay; and adding to this the necessary expenses attending the two different tours he has to make through his brigade in each year, has induced the committee to believe, and they are of opinion, that the compensation now allowed by law to brigade inspectors, is nothing more than a fair equivalent for the services rendered, and that the prayer of the petitioners ought not to be granted. They have therefore directed their chairman to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the petitioners have leave to withdraw their petition.

Ordered, That the usual number of copies of the said report and resolution be printed for the use of the legislature.

Mr. Mixer, from the committee on claims, to which was referred the petition of Joseph Lamb, legal representative of the heirs at law of John Thompson deceased, praying for the passage of a law to grant to him certain military lands mentioned in the petition, asked for leave to report by bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Mixer, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of John Thompson deceased;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Morell, from the committee on the incorporation of cities and villages, to which was referred the petition of sundry inhabitants of the village of Brockport in the county of Monroe, praying for the passage of a law to incorporate said village, asked for leave to report by bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Morell, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to incorporate the village of Brockport;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Ordered, That Mr. Waring have leave of absence for four days, Mr. Titus for twelve days, and Mr. Jones for twelve days.

On motion of Mr. Edgerton,

Resolved, That the committee on ways and means be instructed to enquire into the expediency of providing by law for the sale of lands liable to be sold for taxes, in the county where the lands are situated, and not at the seat of government, as is now provided.

Mr. W. Hall, from the committee on engrossed bills, reported, that they have examined the engrossed bill entitled "An act to lay out and improve a road through the Buffalo Indian reservation in the county of Erie," and find the same correctly engrossed.

Thereupon,

Ordered, That the said bill be referred to the committee appointed under the 47th rule of this house.

Mr. W. Hall, from the committee on engrossed bills, reported, that they have examined the engrossed bill entitled "An act relating to the purchase of lands from the First Christian and Orchard parties of the Oneida Indians," and find the same correctly engrossed.

The said engrossed bill, entitled "An act relating to the purchase of lands from the First Christian and Orchard parties of the Oneida Indians," was read the third time.

Resolved, That the bill do pass.

Ordered, That the clerk deliver the said bill to the Senate, and request their concurrence in the same.

On motion of Mr. Dayton,

Ordered, That the committee of the whole be discharged from the further consideration of the engrossed bill from the Senate, entitled "An act concerning marine insurance in the state of New-York;" and that the said bill be recommitted to a select committee, consisting of Mr. Dayton, Mr. Mallory and Mr. Starr, to sonsider and report thereon.

A communication from the surveyor-general was read, in the words following, to wit:

Respectfully submitted,
SIMEON DE WITT, Surveyor-General.

January 31, 1829.

Ordered, That the said communication be referred to the committee on colleges, academies and common schools, and that the usual number of copies of the same be printed for the use of the legislature.

A message from the Governor, delivered by his private secretary, was read, in the words following, to wit:

TO THE ASSEMBLY.

GENTLEMEN,

I have this day approved and signed the following bills:

"An act for the relief of the trustees of the Rensselaer Oswego academy."

"An act incorporating the Susquehannah bridge company of the village of Binghamton."

MARTIN VAN BUREN.

Albany, January 31, 1829.

A message from the Governor, delivered by his private secretary, was read, in the words following, to wit:

TO THE ASSEMBLY.

GENTLEMEN,

I cannot approve of the bill entitled "An act to allow Rebecca Albro, wife of Wait Albro, of the town of Beekman in Dutchess county, to receive certain legacies left her by her grandfather;" and do therefore return the same to thes Asembly, with these my objections.

The petition, upon which this bill is founded sets forth, that the petitioner was deserted by her husband, in the month of August last, he having previously conducted himself in a very exceptionable manner; that she does not know where he now is, and that since that period, a legacy has been left to her by her grandfather. Upon these ex parte allegations, sustained to the satisfaction of the committee, it is proposed by the bill to divest the husband of the petitioner of his acknowledged legal rights, without giving him an opportunity to be heard in their defence. I have no reason to doubt the equity of this application, or to question the good faith in which it is made, and my objections to the proposed relief do not, therefore, arise from a supposition that in this case, positive injustice will be done to the absent party. It is becausc I consider the provisions of the bill objectionable in principle, and from an apprehension of its injurious influence on the score of precedent, that I am constrained to withhold my approval thereof. The constitution declares that "no member of this state shall be disfranchised or deprived of any of the rights or privileges secured to any citizen thereof, unless by the law of the land, or the judgment of his peers." Although the general object of this provision was designed for the protection of our citizens charged with offences, its spirit is justly applicable to every case of private right. By "the law of the land," is to be understood the general law, applying equally to all citizens, and to be administered through the instrumentality of the judicial power, and not to mere private acts, without the intervention of previous judicial enquiry. To refuse legislative aid in every case where competent relief can be afforded by the established judicial tribunals of the country, ought therefore to be regarded as an established axiom in legislation. It will be seen by the communication of the chancellor, herewith transmitted, that such relief can be afforded in the present case. It would doubtless save the petitioner some expense to obtain redress through the channel she has selected, and if, in other respects allowable, our feelings for her sex and condition should induce us to grant it. But that consideration is not sufficient to justify us in unnecessarily and definitively passing upon the rights of a citizen in his absence, and without an opportunity of being heard, and in confounding the appropriate duties of separate departments of the government, the action of which should be kept distinct, as far as may be practicable. It is not intended by these objections to raise the abstract question of the power of the legislature in the premises. I am aware that many private acts have already been passed, that conflict with the principle I advance; but I am also aware that the increase of legislation upon private rights, under various and imposing representations of hardships and inconvenience, has in the judgment of observing and respectable men, become an evil calling for restraint rather than extension.

MARTIN VAN BUREN.

Albany, January 31, 1829.

Albany, January 27, 1829.

Dear Sir,

I have examined the bill to allow the wife of Wait Albro to receive certain legacies; and if the facts are as represented in her petition, there is no legal objection to her receiving a support for herself and children out of the legacy and distributive share of the estate of her grandfather, left her by his will. It was for a long time doubted whether the court of chancery would interfere on a direct application of the wife against the husband, to restrain him from obtaining her separate property without making a suitable provision for her support: although it was the ordinary practice of the court to require such provision when the husband applied for the aid of chancery to obtain her separate property. At length, in the case of Gardner v. Walker and wife, (1 Strange, 503) Lord Macclesfield decided that the wife's equity was to be protected, whoever might be the plaintiff in chancery: And this decision has been since followed in the English courts of chancery. This subject is treated of at large in the 2d chapter of the fifth book of Clancey's Rights of Women; where all the English cases on the subject are collected. The English cases were received by the court of errors in the state in the case of Udall and Kinney v. Kinney, (3 Cowen's Reports, 590) and the right of the wife to a support for herself and children out of her equitable property, in opposition to the claims of the husband, was fully sustained.

The only question which can arise on this bill, is as to the propriety of legislating on the subject without giving the husband the right to be heard, which he would have if the wife filed her bill in equity. That however is a question on which it cannot be necessary that I should express any opinion in this particular case, as I presume there is not doubt as to the facts alleged in the petition on which this law is founded. But cases might occur in which injustice might be done by settling the rights of husband and wife by ex parte legislation.

I am with great respect, yours &c.

R. HYDE WALWORTH.

Thereupon,

Mr. Speaker put the question whether the house would agree to the final passage of the said bill, notwithstanding the objections of the Governor; and it was determined in the negative, there not being two-thirds of all the members present voting in favor thereof.

inspection of pot and pearl ashes, and the duties of inspectors, respectfully reports:

That he has inspected, since 1st January 1828, to 1st January 1829, the following number of barrels of pot and pearl ashes, viz:

3,524	bbls.	1st	sort	pot ashes.
141	"	2d	"	do
29	"	3d	"	do
4	"	condemned		do
——		3,698
1,201	bbls.	1st	sort	pearl ashes.
65	"	2d	"	do
17	"	3d	"	do
7	"	condemned		do
——		1,290

A communication from Jasper S. Keeler, inspector of flour for the city and county of Albany, was read, in the words following, to wit:

Albany, February 2, 1829.

I herewith remit you the annual return of flour inspected in the city of Albany, for the year 1828.

The quantity inspected the past year, shews a decrease from 1827 of nearly 14,000 barrels. This can only be accounted for by the crops falling short, and the quality of the wheat being inferior from what it has generally been in past years, and likewise the low price which flour bore for the greater part of the season.

I am, respectfully,
JASPER S. KEELER,

Mr. Savage, from the committee on grievances, to which was referred the petition of Wessel Ten Broeck and George Ten Broeck, reported:

That the committee have had the petition under their consideration; and it appears that the petitioners, in the years of 1805 or 6, were induced by the president and directors of the Cayuga turnpike company, to take and work a certain portion of the said turnpike road; that they succeeded in completing their contract, which amounted to $1200; and that there is not, nor has there been, a gate upon this road for the collection of tolls; and the petitioners say they have not received their pay for the labor expended on the said road.

The petitioners further state, that the commissioners of highways of the town of Edmeston, did, in the year 1813 or 1814, lay out a public road on the said turnpike road, and has ever since been used by the public as a public highway. For the use of this road, and the inconvenience to the petitioners being deprived of their pay for their labor for so long a time, is the reasons urged by them why the state ought in justice to pay them.

The committee are of the opinion that this is grievous on the part of the petitioners, and hard to be borne; but it would be more grievous for the state to pay them, as it would open the door for an endless number of similar applications which have no claims upon the state.

The committee are of the opinion that the petitioners should look to their employers for their pay, and not the state; and have directed their chairman to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the prayer of the petitioners ought not to be granted.

Thereupon,

Mr. Speaker put the question whether the house would agree to the said resolution, and it was determined in the affirmative.

Mr. Norton, from the select committee to which was referred the petition of John M. Canfield, superintendent of light-houses on Lake Ontario, reported:

That by the petition of said Canfield, it appears that the congress of the United States have made an appropriation of one thousand dollars, for the removal of certain standing wood, which obstructs the light of a light-house already erected at the mouth of Genesee river, for the benefit of the navigators of Lake Ontario; and that permission can not be obtained, inasmuch as a portion of the lands belong to minors, and other proprietors refuse their assent without an exorbitant compensation.

The committee are satisfied that the growing commerce of Lake Ontario requires the interference of the legislature, to effect the removal of the obstructions in question, in a manner not to affect the rights of the owners of the land on which the wood is growing; and have prepared a bill for that object, and have instructed their chairman to ask leave to introduce the same.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Norton, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act authorising the superintendent of light-houses on Lake Ontario, to remove certain obstructions to the light-house at the mouth of the Genesee river;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Skinner, from the select committee to whom was referred so much of the message of his Excellency the Governor as relates to the election law, reported:

That the resolution directing the appointment of the committee, was not perfectly definite in relation to the duty imposed, or the precise subject referred; but as the committee understood the reference, the propriety of changing the time and manner of choosing electors of president and vice-president of the United States, was the subject intended to be submitted to them, and they have directed their enquiries to that point alone.

The committee have approached the duty assigned them, impressed with the importance of the subject, and aware that much interest would be taken in the result of their deliberations.

The quietness of the public mind at the close of the recent contest for the presidency, and at the distance of four years from another election, affords an opportunity peculiarly favorable to a free and dispassionate discussion of the question proposed, when our opinions will be uninfluenced by the bearing of the mode of appointment upon the prospects of any individual or party; our judgments unbiassed by political prejudices or personal feeling; and when no considerations, aside from the dignity, the honor and the influence of the state, can have any bearing upon the decision.

The constitution of the United States declares that "each state shall appoint, in such manner as the legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors equal to the whole number of senators and representatives to which the state may be entitled in the congress." It is much to be regretted, that under this provision of the constitution, the legislatures of the several states have adopted different modes of appointment. In fourteen states the electors are chosen by general ticket, in eight by districts, and in two by the legislature. Of the whole number of electors chosen by all the states, one hundred and fifty-eight are chosen by general ticket, eighty-nine by districts, and fourteen by the legislature. Excluding the state of New York, the seven states that choose by districts elect but fifty-three electors. From this statement it appears that the state of New York is the only large state that has adopted the district system. While the states of Pennsylvania, Virginia, Ohio, North Carolina and Massachusetts choose electors on a general ticket, which gives them an undivided vote, and a controlling influence in the choice of president and vice-president of the United States, New-York alone of the larger states, unequalled in her population and number of electors, and in the influence and consideration to which she is justly entitled, in the decision of a question so interesting to the state and to the Union, has adopted a district system which divides her vote, and which can hardly fail, under any circumstances, to paralise her influence, and reduce her to a level with the smaller states.

A sincere desire has been often manifested by the state, that the constitution of the United States should be so amended as to provide a uniform mode of choosing electors throughout the Union. To this end resolutions passed both branches of the legislature in the year eighteen hundred and eighteen, and were subsequently renewed, instructing our senators and requesting our representatives in congress, to use their exertions to procure such amendment. But the efforts which have been made on the part of this state, have not been seconded by the other states. The result of past attempts affords but little promise for future exertions, and demonstrates the propriety of promptly adopting a mode of appointment which will secure the just influence of this state in the choice of president, without reference to speculations upon this defect of the constitution, or expectations of amendment which may never be realized.

Previous to the year 1825, the electors of this state were appointed by the legislature. In that and the preceding years the mode of choice was the subject of much discussion; and although all were agreed in the end, that the choice ought to be made directly by the people, without resort to delegated authority, or to any intermediate body, yet great diversity of opinion prevailed in relation to the manner in which the people should exercise this right. It was urged on the one hand that the district system would divide the vote and destroy the influence of the state. On the other, that the general ticket proposed, was not in accordance with the spirit of our institutions; that the elector could have but little personal knowledge of the numerous candidates for whom he would be required to vote; that an intermediate body must select the candidates, where intrigue and management might prevail; and that the abiding sense of responsibility, on the part of the representative, which afforded the greatest security against the abuse of delegated authority, would be removed, by destroying that intimate connexion, which, in the plan of all our institutions, exists between the representative and his constituents. Such was the diversity of opinion, and so confident were the advocates of the different plans in the correctness of their positions, that a law was passed, to take the sense of the electors of this state upon the question, with a view to conform the decision to the will of the people. Accordingly, at the general election in 1825, three propositions were submitted to the people. A choice "by districts," "by general ticket plurality," and "by general ticket majority."

Were the committee satisfied that the result of the canvass under the law in question afforded conclusive evidence of the sense of the people, upon the propositions submitted to them, they should consider the question at rest. But it is believed, that an examination of the facts connected with the subject will show that the district system has never received the imposing sanction of a majority of the electors of this state.

In the year 1825, when the question was submitted, the election was confined to the choice of senators, members of assembly and county officers. The fever of passion and the excitement of feeling which had prevailed in relation (to what was called) the electoral law, had subsided, but little interest was taken in the question, and but few votes given.

The whole number of persons qualified to vote in this state, at the time, as appears by the census taken that year, was two hundred and ninety-six thousand one hundred and thirty-two. The number of votes given under the act in question was one hundred and thirty-seven thousand eight hundred and forty; of which number but one hundred and twenty-four thousand and sixty-six were in either of the forms prescribed by the act. Sixty-six thousand three hundred and forty, for a choice, "by districts," fifty-six thousand eight hundred and one, "by general ticket plurality," and nine hundred and forty-one "by general ticket majority."

From the above statement taken from the official returns, it appears that more than one half of the electors of this state have given no expression on the question, and less than one fourth have given their assent to the district system.

The opportunity afforded, and the effort made to obtain from the people, through the ballot boxes, an expression upon the propositions submitted to them, inclined the committee to approach the result with the utmost caution and deference; but from the view which they have taken of the facts connected with that expression, they are thoroughly persuaded it deserves very little weight in determining the policy of changing or continuing the present law.

There is much reason to believe that there has been an entire change in public opinion since this law was passed—in the language of the message, "recent events have made a very strong impression on the public mind," and the impressions of experience are the deepest and the most enduring.

The practical operation of our present system has produced consequences more alarming than were predicted by those who opposed it at the time it was adopted. In the late election for president, this state gave but four effective votes, and her influence in the decision of the controversy might have been borne down, and the will of a majority of the electors defeated by a state possessing less than one eighth of her population. The objections which have been made to a general ticket have been mentioned, and would apply with much force to the election of members of congress, or any legislative officers.

It is true that all the persons entitled to vote, could not be expected to possess much personal knowledge of the individuals who would be nominated for electors, but they are chosen for one specific object. The trust is extremely limited, and very clearly defined. They would be selected with reference to their avowed preference for a given candidate for the presidency, and their tried integrity as public men. A sense of responsibility to those by whose suffrages they were elected, the fearful denunciations that would attend the abandonment of principle, and the disappointment of public expectation would afford entire security for the faithful execution of the trust.

A law directing the choice of electors by general ticket, and by the highest number of votes, is, in the opinion of the committee, the only mode which will produce union of effort and concentration of action—which will give force and effect to the will of a majority of the people, and secure the just influence of the state in the choice of president and vice-president of the United States.

The committee feel more confidence in the conclusion to which they have come, from the fact that selected as they were from the several senate districts of the state, and conversant as they are in some measure, with the opinions of their constituents, their views entirely correspond upon this subject; and they are unanimously of opinion, that the repeal of the present law, and the adoption of a general ticket would be in accordance with the will of a great majority of the people, and is enjoined by every dictate of policy.

The committee concur in the opinion expressed by the Governor, that this election ought to be held at a time different from any other election; and they beg leave to refer the house to the reasons which are very fully given in that part of the message referred to them.

The constitution of the United States gives to congress the power to determine the time of choosing electors, and the day on which they shall give their votes. In pursuance of this provision, an act of congress of the first of March 1792, declares that electors shall be appointed in each state within thirty-four days preceding the first Wednesday in December in every fourth year succeeding the last election; and that the said electors shall meet and give their votes on the said first Wednesday in December, at such place as shall be directed by the legislature thereof.

With a view to bring this election within the time limited by the act of congress, and to hold it at a time different from any other election, the committee recommend that the election be held on the third Monday of November preceding the choice of president and vice-president; and they have prepared a bill accordingly, which they now ask leave to introduce.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Skinner, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act prescribing the time and manner of appointing electors of president and vice-president of the United States;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Ordered, That the usual number of copies of the said bill and report be printed for the use of the legislature.

A message from the Governor, delivered by his private secretary, was read, in the words following, to wit:

TO THE ASSEMBLY.

GENTLEMEN,

At the request of the Governor of South-Carolina, I have the honor of laying before you certain resolutions passed by the legislature of that state.

M. V. BUREN.

Albany, February 3d, 1829.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
COLUMBIA, S. C. JAN. 19th, 1829.

SIR,

In compliance with a resolution of the general assembly of this state, I have the honor to transmit to your Excellency certain resolutions, relating to the powers of the general government, with a request that they may be laid before the legislature of your state.

Respectfully your ob't. serv't.

STEPHEN D. MILLER.

Resolutions adopted by the State of South-Carolina.

In the House of Representatives,
December 20, 1828.

1. Resolved, That the opinion of this legislature, on the subject of the assumed right of congress to regulate duties on imports, for the purpose of encouraging domestic industry, as heretofore expressed in the various resolutions adopted in the years 1825 and 1827, is unchanged; and after the further aggression by the passage of the tariff act of 1828, this legislature is restrained from the assertion of the sovereign rights of the state by the hope that the magnanimity and justice of the good people of the Union will effect the abandonment of a system, partial in its nature, unjust in its operation, and not within the powers delegated to congress.

2. Resolved, That the measures to be pursued consequent on the perseverance in this system are purely questions of expediency, and not of allegiance; and that for the purpose of ascertaining the opinion and inviting the co-operation of other states, a copy of these and the resolutions heretofore adopted by this legislature, be transmitted to the governors of the several states, with a request that they be laid before the several legislatures to determine on such ulterior measures as they may think the occasion demands.—Ordered to Senate for concurrence.

By order of the House.

R. ANDERSON, C. H. R.

In the Senate, December 20, 1828.

Resolved, That the Senate concur.

JOB JOHNSTON, C. S.

In the House of Representatives.
December 15, 1825.

1. Resolved, That congress does not possess the power, under the constitution, to adopt a general system of internal improvement as a national measure.

2. Resolved, That a right to impose and collect taxes, does not authorise congress to lay a tax for any other purposes than such as are embraced in the specific grants of power, and those necessarily implied therein.

3. Resolved, That congress ought not to exercise a power granted for particular objects, to effect other objects, the right to effect which has never been conceded.

4. Resolved, That it is an unconstitutional exercise of power, on the part of congress, to tax the citizens of one state to make roads and canals for the citizens of another state.

5. Resolved, That it is an unconstitutional exercise of power, on the part of congress, to lay duties to protect domestic manufactures.

Resolved, That the House do agree to the resolutions. Ordered, that they be sent to the Senate for concurrence.

By order of the House,

R. ANDERSON, C. H. R.

By order of the Senate.

WM. D. MARTIN, C. S.

In the Senate,
December 12, 1827.

1. Resolved, That the constitution of the United States is a compact between the people of the different states with each other, as separate, independent sovereignties; and that for any violation of the letter or spirit of that compact by the congress of the United States, it is not only the right of the people, but of the legislatures, who represent them to every extent not limited, to remonstrate against violations of the fundamental compact.

2. Resolved, That the acts of congress, known by the name of tariff laws, the object of which is not the raising of revenue, or the regulation of foreign commerce, but the promotion of domestic manufactures, are violations of the constitution in its spirit, and ought to be repealed.

3. Resolved, That congress has no power to construct roads and canals in the states, for the purposes of internal improvement, with or without the assent of the states in whose limits those internal improvements are made: the authority of congress extending no farther than to pass the "necessary and proper laws" to carry into execution their enumerated powers.

4. Resolved, That the American Colonization Society is not an object of national interest, and that congress has no power, in any way, to patronize or direct appropriations for the benefit of this or any other society.

5. Resolved, That our senators in congress be instructed, and our representatives requested, to continue to oppose every increase of the tariff with a view to protect domestic manufactures, and all appropriations to the purposes of internal improvements of the United States, and all appropriations in favor of the Colonization Society, or the patronage of the same, either directly or indirectly by the general government.

Resolved, That the Senate do agree to the resolutions. Ordered, that they be sent to the House of Representatives for concurrence.

By order of the Senate.

Ordered, That the said communication be laid upon the table, and that the usual number of copies thereof be printed for the use of the legislature.

A communication from the surveyor-general was read, in the words following, to wit:

The surveyor-general, on the petition of Ashbel Kellogg and others, of the town of Salina, referred to him by the Honorable the Assembly, respectfully reports:

That the superintendent of the Onondaga salt springs was heretofore authorised to lease to the lessees of the manufacturing lots, a certain number of acres, as an accommodation for pasturing, &c. At a vendue held at Syracuse last July, of the state's property in the reservation, it was represented, that on some of these pasture lots, there were valuable improvements, alleged to have been made under an expectation that the leases, at their expiration, would be renewed, with the renewal of those of the manufacturing lots; and the surveyor-general was requested to suspend the sales of such parts as comprehended such improvements, in order that those who made them might have an opportunity to apply to the legislature for relief. The request appearing reasonable, it was complied with, so far as it respected those small lots comprehending the improvements which were laid out for sale, and happened to be parts of the lease lots. A compliance with the request was considered proper, because it has heretofore been the policy of the legislature to secure to individuals the fruits of their labor, even in cases where it has been done without legal authority. The number of cases for which relief is solicited, does not exceed the number of the petitioners.

Respectfully submitted,
SIMEON DE WITT, Surveyor-General.

The petition of sundry inhabitants of the county of Oswego, praying for the appointment of commissioners to fix upon a central location for the county buildings in said county, was read, and referred to the committee on the erection and division of towns and counties.

Seven several petitions of sundry inhabitants of the counties of Wayne, Seneca, Cortland and Tompkins, and the petition of the society commonly called Shakers, of Port Bay and Sodus in the county of Wayne, praying for the repeal of the law prohibiting the practice of botanic physicians, were severally read, and committed to a committee of the whole, when on the bill upon that subject.

The petition of the president and directors of the St. Lawrence turnpike road company, praying for the passage of a law to authorise them to abandon their road, was read, and referred to the committee on the establishment and improvement of roads and bridges, and the incorporation of turnpike companies.

Mr. Johnson, from the committee on canals and internal improvements, to which was referred the petitions of sundry citizens of the counties bordering on the Seneca lake, praying for the construction of a canal from Newtown in the county of Tioga, and from the Chimney Narrows on the Chemung river, to the said lake and the Erie canal, reported:

The subject embraced in the petitions before the committee, has often been before the legislature, and reports favorable to the prayer of the petitioners have ever been made until the last session, when a majority of the canal committee reported against the prayer of the petitioners.

At an early day, the route of the proposed Chemung canal, attracted attention. During Gen. Sullivan's expedition against the Indians, at a very early period of our history, he addressed a letter to Gen. Washington, on the subject of uniting the northern and southern waters, by the route now proposed. General Washington presented the subject to the consideration of congress. In 1807, Mr. Gallatin again directed the public attention to this communication, as the shortest link to connect these waters.

The Chemung canal route was one of those surveyed by Mr. Geddes, in 1825, and his report may be found in the journals of 1826, appendix F.

In 1826, Mr. Allen, chairman of the committee on canals and internal improvements, reported in favor of constructing the work, and a bill passed the Assembly for that purpose. The report will be found in the journals of that year, p. 1031.

In 1827, Mr. Granger reported in favor of the canal, and the bill passed the Assembly by a very large vote. Journal 1827, p. 247.

In 1828, a majority of the canal committee reported against the construction of this work. The minority of the committee offered a substitute, which was adopted by the house, and the bill for its construction passed, but was lost in the Senate. These reports may be found in the journal of 1828, p. 680.

The committee will not swell the journals of this house by entering into a lengthy and detailed argument, to show the utility of this work, especially since so many able reports have been made on the subject, which have received the sanction of one branch of the legislature. A few facts have been presented to the committee, which they think deserve consideration.

To make the communication required, a canal must be constructed from Seneca lake to Newtown, eighteen miles; and a navigable feeder from the Chimney Narrows, on the Chemung river, to the summit level of the canal, thirteen miles, making a navigation by canal of thirty-one miles.

Mr. Geddes in his estimate, computed the cost of this work at about $240,000, with wooden locks. An increased expenditure would have to be incurred of $52,000 to build locks on the plan proposed by Mr. Hutchinson on the Chenango canal, which would make the sum of $292,000. The committee propose to insert in the bill, the sum of $300,000, believing that sum sufficient to cover all expenses.

This canal may be constructed in three years, and the premium on the stock will more than pay the interest upon the amount expended in its construction.

The next question to which the committee directed their attention, was, whether this work, if completed, would secure to the state sufficient tolls, including additional tolls to be added to the Erie canal, to warrant its construction.

On this subject, Judge Geddes in his report, heretofore referred to, remarks, "Taking into calculation all the products of the mines, the fields, the forests and the great addition to the imports of this country, and there will no doubt remain that this will be a very profitable canal to make. No water rights to be purchased, but some to be disposed of."

In addition to the revenue which will be derived from products of our own state, which will find their way to market through our canals, the produce, minerals, &c., of the counties between the north line of Pennsylvania and the west branch of the Susquehannah, that will be diverted from the dangerous and hazardous navigation of the Susquehannah, to one of safety upon the canal, will be of no inconsiderable amount. It is reasonable to presume, that the opening of this canal would draw through it, a very large share of the trade of the adjoining counties in Pennsylvania.

The following estimates were presented to the legislature at its last session, by the friends of this canal.

A part of the above estimates were made, and all of them examined and approved, by the late Dugald Cameron, a member of the last house of Assembly, from the county of Steuben: A man second to no other in that section of the state, for his intelligence and his intimate acquaintance with the resources of that part of the state. He had been, for nearly thirty years previous to his death, agent for a large estate situate in the counties seeking this improvement, and was eminently qualified to judge correctly upon this subject. The following is a copy of the estimate made by him, from which the above is condensed.

"Estimate of produce sent from that part of Steuben county, watered by the Conhocton, Canisteo, Cowanesque and Tioga branches of the Chemung river, to market by way of the Susquehannah, in the Spring of 1827.

Wheat from Conhocton,.....	bush.	48,000
do from Canisteo,.....		14,000
do from Tioga and Cowanisque,.....		12,000
do from Mud creek,.....		6,000
		80,000
Or 2,162 tons wheat,.....		2,162
1,000 barrels whiskey, 142 tons, ...		142
1,200 do pork, 160 tons, ...		160
Beef, tallow, lard, butter, cheese, of which I have no account, perhaps 20 or 30 tons, say,.....		25
Superfine flour, 1000 barrels,.....		100
Pot and pearl ashes, which with the flour last mentioned, was immediately re-shipped from Port Deposit for New-York, ...		150
Tons,.....		2,739

"Pine boards were estimated at 7 million feet; of square timber, masts and spars, staves, &c., I am not able to form an estimate; nor as to shingles, curled maple, cherry and ash, great quantities of which are annually sent to market. The country is new—give it facilities to send its produce to market, and this statement, in less than 10 years, would shew an increase of ten-fold."

Mr. Cameron also remarks,—"I believe if the Chemung canal was in full operation, that all the produce of the several branches of the Chemung river within mentioned, would take the route of the canal to market. I send much produce to market, particularly wheat to Baltimore, and I have always sustained a loss of from 10 to 20 per cent.; that is, I have lost two arks out of ten, and I have never yet escaped losing less in any one year, with every care necessary to such a navigation."

The minority of the canal committee of last year, remark:

"It is believed, that upon an accurate examination of the section, drained by these waters, (the Tioga, Cowanisque, the Canisteo and the Conhocton,) when the extent and fertility of their vallies is considered, and when these shall be compared with the results upon the Erie and Champlain canals, every impartial mind will admit their correctness, so far as relates to the amount to be derived from agricultural products, and from the returning cargo of merchandize, salt, gypsum, &c."

As to the article of salt, it is presumed the estimate is below, what would be annually exported. It is now sent more than 100 miles below Newtown into Pennsylvania, and would doubtless supply a very large extent of country still lower down, if a canal was opened for its conveyance from the head of the Seneca lake.

The committee believe from the information adduced before them, that on the completion of this work, instead of 30,000 tons of coal being annually transported, the probability is, that a much larger amount would annually find its way to market by the canal. Our salt works will soon require an immense quantity of this article; and the time is not very far distant, when the manufacture of salt will be very much affected, unless a cheap supply of fuel can be obtained.

This coal is said to be one of the finest specimens of bituminous coal that has yet been discovered. "The beds are located within five miles of waters now navigable during particular seasons of the year, and which may be made so to the mines. Thay are thirty miles from the termination of the navigable feeder at the Chimney Narrows; and it is represented that a company is already incorporated in Pennsylvania, and will commence a canal from the mines to the line of that state, as soon as this state shall commence the construction of this work." That canal would terminate twelve miles from the Chimney Narrows; and a slack water navigation would be made by a company incorporated at the last session of the legislature of this state, as the committee are informed.

During the past season, the coal beds have been opened, a large quantity of coal raised, a large establishment for the manufacture of iron has been erected by the company last alluded to, and no doubt exists that business will be extensively carried on by that company, if an outlet can be afforded for their coal.

A friend of this work has directed the attention of the committee to another view of the subject as regards the probable use of coal. Upon the supposition that the steam-boats upon the North river should be driven to the necessity of using coal, as the committee believe they will be at no very distant day, then a very large amount of tolls would annually be received for coal sent to this city. The bituminous coal is the most useful in generating steam, and if it could be furnished cheaper than wood, it would ere long entirely take the place of it.—This coal, from an analysis of Dr. Mead, is proved to be of a superior quality. Ten bushels of it is equal, when burned in a furnace, to one cord of wood; it weighs about eighty pounds to the bushel; one ton of coal is equal to $2\frac{8}{10}$ cords of wood. If coal can be delivered at Albany for a less sum than $2\frac{8}{10}$ cords of wood, which, reckoning wood at $4 per cord, will be $11.20, the proprietors of boats, and other machinery driven by steam power, would be induced to purchase it.

It has been estimated that the steam-boats plying on the Hudson river and in the harbor of New-York, consume annually 108,000 cords of wood; and if the Tioga coal should become a substitute for wood, as the friends of this measure feel confident it would, soon after the canal should be opened, a market would then be secured for a quantity of coal equivalent to that quantity of wood, which at 10 bushels of coal per cord of wood, is equal to 38,571 tons of coal. The tolls upon this article alone, supposing it to pass 241 miles upon the canal, is $92,923.50.

It is urged, against the construction of this canal, that the produce of that region will find its way to Baltimore and Philadelphia, should it be made, the river opening so much sooner than the canal.

To this objection it is answered, that the farmers will send their wheat crops to market in the fall instead of the spring, as is now done on the line of the Erie canal, thus receiving returns from the products of the farm, much sooner than they otherwise would.

The citizens of that portion of our state are well acquainted with the dangers and hazards of the navigation of the Susquehannah, which amount always to an average loss of from 10 to 20 per cent., as stated by Dugald Cameron from his own shipments to Baltimore; and it cannot reasonably be supposed they will encounter all this hazard to find a market at Baltimore or Philadelphia, which is not as good as the market at New-York. But suppose a canal, as contemplated, should be constructed up the Susquehannah, what then would be the inducement to go to the south?

From Newtown to this city would be a navigation by canals of 241 miles, with 40 miles by the Seneca lake. From the same place to Port Deposit, at the head of tide, where property is transhipped for Baltimore, would be, by canals 324 miles, and 70 miles addition to reach Baltimore. From the same place to Swatara, where the Union canal intersects that of the Susquehannah, is 254 miles, and from thence to Philadelphia, by the Union and Schuylkill canals, is 120, making 374 miles.

Should the works of Pennsylvania be completed, the people at Newtown and on the waters above that place, could reach Albany by 83 miles less of canal navigation than to Baltimore, and 133 less than to Philadelphia.

The committee would refer to their general remarks at the close of their report upon the Chenango canal, as containing their views upon the policy and ability of the state to continue her splendid system of internal improvements.

In reference to the application for a canal from Bath to the Crooked lake, and from the Crooked lake to Seneca lake, the committee have not been furnished with the survey of the engineer, made pursuant to a resolution passed at the last session of the legislature.

No examination has been made as relates to that project. As soon as the committee shall be furnished with the necessary documents, their attention will be devoted to a careful examination of the subject.

The committee have instructed their chairman to ask leave to introduce a bill for the construction of the Chemung canal.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Johnson, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act authorising the construction of a canal from the head of Seneca lake to Newtown;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Ordered, That the usual number of copies of the said bill and report be printed for the use of the legislature.

Mr. Armstrong, from the committee on the erection and division of towns and counties, to which was referred the petition of sundry inhabitants of Orange county, praying for the erection of a new town from parts of the towns of Walkill, Goshen, Blooming-Grove, New-Windsor and Montgomery, and also a remonstrance against the said application, reported:

That the committee have examined the said petition and remonstrance, and heard both parties by their agents.

The petitioners state, that they are located at the extreme corners of those towns; and some have to travel from ten to twelve miles, to attend the ordinary town business: That from the first organization of the towns in the county, they have suffered this inconvenience, until the present time: That by the present location of the town lines and the public roads, some of the inhabitants have to travel three miles (a part of which distance is through an adjoining town,) to the road district on which they are assessed to labor.

The petitioners also state, that great inconvenience and difficulty exist in forming their school districts: That many of the districts are formed out of two and three towns; consequently two and three towns to make reports, and receive their money from, which frequently costs more than it is worth, and is abandoned.

The remonstrance states, that they are not aware that the inhabitants of that district of country proposed to be included in a new town, are enduring any peculiar privations, or inconveniences uncommon to their fellow-citizens generally: That the towns with which they are at present connected, are of moderate extent; and that it cannot be said that any hardship exists in the transaction of any town business, arising from immoderate distance, or the want of direct and good avenues of communication; and should the application prevail, many of the inhabitants would be injured.

The committee, upon a view of the whole subject, are of opinion that it would be a great convenience to the inhabitants comprised within the contemplated new town, and that no great inconvenience could result to the several towns from which it is proposed to be taken.

The committee are of opinion that the prayer of the petitioners is reasonable, and ought to be granted. They have prepared a bill accordingly, and directed their chairman to ask leave to introduce the same.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Armstrong, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to erect a new town from parts of the towns of Walkill, Goshen, Blooming-Grove, New-Windsor and Montgomery, in the county of Orange;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Burt, from the committee on the establishment and improvement of roads and bridges, and the incorporation of turnpike companies, on the petition of Samuel Wilkinson and others, praying for the passage of an act authorising a reduction of the width of certain streets in the village of Buffalo, asked leave to report by bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Burt, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act extending the lines of certain lots in the south village of Black-Rock;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Hazeltine, from the select committee to which was referred the petition of sundry inhabitants of the village of Jamestown in the county of Chautauque, praying for leave to improve a part of the outlet of Chautauque lake for steamboat navigation, reported:

That a steam-boat of about 65 or 70 tons burthen, has been in successful operation during the past season, on said lake and outlet, and approaches within less than a mile of the village of Jamestown, which is situated on the outlet below the landing, At the landing is a bar, over which, during the dry season, there is an insufficiency of water for the boat to pass. The petitioners represent, that this obstacle may be removed, by excavating a channel in the bed of the stream, from the present landing down the stream about 54 rods. Below this the channel is flowed by a mill-dam, which affords at all times a sufficient depth of water. No improvements on this part will be necessary, except the removal of sunken timber, stones, &c. and the formation of a basin and wharf at the proposed landing.

The petitioners represent, that it is an important object to them, that their steam-boat, instead of stopping where it now does, should descend to the village; and that the requisite funds can be procured by voluntary contribution. They also propose that these improvements, when made, shall be free to all persons whatever.

The committee believing that our citizens should be encouraged in the prosecution of all laudable undertakings, and that this which is proposed by the petitioners is of that description, do recommend that the prayer of the petitioners be granted. They have therefore prepared a bill in accordance with this report, and ask leave to introduce the same.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Hazeltine, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act authorising Jedediah E. Budlong, Alvin Plumb, Thomas W. Harvey, Daniel Hazeltine and Silas Tiffany, to improve a part of the outlet of Chautauque lake for steam-boat navigation;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Bradish, from the select committee to which was referred the petitions of sundry inhabitants of the counties of Jefferson, Essex, Clinton, Franklin and St. Lawrence, praying the construction of a road from Port Kent in the county of Essex, to Hopkinton in the county of St. Lawrence, reported:

That the committeee have given to the subject referred to them, the attention and examination due to it, as well from its own peculiar interest and importance, as from the great number and respectable character of the memorialists, who have now again renewed their application to the legislature in relation thereto. From that examination, it appears that on the 16th of April, 1827, an act was passed "appointing John Richards, Ezra Thurbur and Jonah Sanford, commissioners to explore and cause to be surveyed, a route for a good road from Lake Champlain, by the best and most practicable route, wih reference to the improvement of the state lands, so as to intersect the turnpike road at or near the town of Hopkinton, in the county of St. Lawrence, and requiring the said commissioners to make a report to the next legislature of such survey, accompanied with a map and profile of the route, shewing the lots and townships through which it should pass; and also to report an estimate of the expense of constructing the same, with a detailed statement of the facts upon which such estimate should be founded."

On the 7th of February, 1828, the said commissioners presented to the legislature a report of their proceedings under the act appointing them. This report, with its accompanying documents, will be found on the 483d, 4th, 5th and 6th pages of the Assembly journal of 1828. The report was accompanied by a map, profile and estimate, made by James Frost, the surveyor employed by the said commissioners in the prosecution of this work, and who is highly distinguished for his ability, faithfulness and accuracy in his profession. By this report it appears that the said commissioners entered upon the performance of their duties, in the month of May, 1827. After the most patient and careful examination of several different routes, and a comparison of their respective advantages, they came unanimously to a decision in favor of that laid down on the map and profile above mentioned. The reasons assigned by the commissioners for their preferring this route, to all others, are, because,

1st. It passes through a greater extent of the lands of this state, and those of better quality than either of the other routes : the lands on this route being generally fit for cultivation :

2d. There is less elevation and greater facility for overcoming it :

3d. It unites, in the most direct manner, the fertile farming districts of the counties of Franklin and St. Lawrence, with the great manufacturing districts of Clinton and Essex counties :

4th. The expense of bridges on this route is not more than one-fourth of that on either of the other routes :

5th. The ground is much more favorable for the construction of a road :

6th. It passes nearly all the way through lands fit for settlement and cultivation.

Upon the subject of the expense of constructing the road in question, the commissioners were of opinion that a good road, in the form of a turnpike, might be completed on the route proposed by them, for $25,836. This estimate was based mainly upon the rates per mile, noted on a schedule contained in the surveyor's report, accompanying that of the commissioners. In this schedule are laid down, in different columns, the different qualities of the ground, and the extent of each quality ; also the estimated expense of making each mile of the road, according to the nature of the soil, and the consequent ease or difficulty of constructing the same. This estimate was also formed with reference to experiments made in similar cases, in the same section of the state.

The map and profile accompanying the report of the commissioners, and which is now suspended in this hall, gives a correct idea of the angles both vertical and horizontal of the road through its whole extent, together with a bird's eye view of the country, to the extent of ten miles in breadth, through which it passes. It also thence appears, and is so stated by Mr. Frost, the surveyor, that the first 19 miles 34 chains and 62 links of the road, from Port Kent, passes nearly the whole distance, along a public highway now in use and tolerably good. At Black Brook the road enters the forest, and the distance from that point to improved lands in Township No. 7, Macomb's purchase, is 52 miles and 94 links ; then passing mostly through cleared land, the distance of 2 miles 73 chains and 90 links, it arrives at the point of its termination, being that of its intersection with the St. Lawrence turnpike, in the town of Hopkinton, in the county of St. Lawrence, making the whole distance 74 miles, 29 chains and 46 links. Twenty miles of this distance, the road passes through lands of the state, a large proportion of which are susceptible of cultivation. The soil being generally of a sandy loam, and well adapted to all the purposes of agriculture.

The above report of the commissioners, with its accompanying documents, was referred to a select committee, to whom had been referred petitions from the inhabitants of the six northern counties of the state, praying the construction of the road in question. On the 23d of February, 1828, that select committee reported in favor of the construction of the road, and introduced a bill making an appropriation for that purpose. This bill passed in committee of the whole, but was lost upon the question of its final passage, it having been declared by the house, on an appeal from the decision of the speaker, by a vote of 33 to 32, to be a two-thirds bill.

The memorialists now again present themselves to the legislature, and renew their petition upon the subject.

In examining the merits of this application, the attention of the committee has been first directed to what seems to have been the main object contemplated by the act of 1827, authorising the survey of a route for this road, viz. the effect to be thereby produced upon that great and important public interest, the common school fund. By the amended constitution, "the proceeds of all lands belonging to the state, except such as may be reserved or appropriated to public use, or ceded to the United States, together with the fund denominated 'the common school fund,' are to be and remain a perpetual fund; the interest of which is to be inviolably appropriated and applied to the support of common schools throughout the state," Upwards of 200,000 acres of these lands lie along the line of this road. Hitherto these lands have remained wholly unproductive; not so much from their inferior quality, as their sequestered position, and the total want of roads, which has rendered them inaccessible. With a view to induce the settlement of these lands, a law was passed in 1822, authorising the commissioners of the land-office to grant one lot of land to any person who should, within five years, clear 15 acres thereof, make an actual settlement, and erect a dwelling-house thereon: And three lots to any one who should, within 4 years, erect a grist-mill thereon, and one lot to any one who should, within 2 years, erect a saw-mill thereon: Provided the number of persons to whom lots should be so granted did not exceed in all thirty. But this law has proved ineffectual. Few have availed themselves of its provisions. It has therefore failed to accomplish the objects contemplated by the legislature in its enactment; and this valuable tract of land still remains wholly unproductive. The committee are unanimously of opinion, that the opening and constructing of the road in question, would contribute more effectually than any thing else, to promote the sale and settlement of those lands, and thereby accomplish the interesting objects which the framers of the constitution had in view in their inviolable appropriation to the fund for the support of common schools.

The committee forbear to make any observations upon the sacred character of this appropriation, or the important and interesting objects to which it is inviolably devoted. To the enlightened representatives of the people, nothing surely need be said of the inestimable value of those institutions, which bring within the reach of every child of the republic, whatever may be his condition, the means of such an education as may qualify him for the ordinary duties of life, and thereby prepare him to become a wholesome and useful citizen. In the support of these primary institutions, these sources of knowledge and of virtue to the young and rising generation, as well each individual citizen, as the state at large has a deep interest.

Other considerations of a public nature have addressed themselves with great force to the minds of the committee, and seem to them to urge the construction of the road in question.

The only present channel of communication between the northern parts of New-England, that great source of emigration, and the fertile valley of the St. Lawrence, and the country bordering on the upper lakes, is a road running along the northern boundary of the United States, and near to it. The inconveniences of this, even in time of peace, have been sufficiently manifest, by the great temptations and facilities thereby afforded for carrying on an illicit commerce with the adjoining provinces, and thereby defrauding the public revenue. But in the case of any future war in which the Canadas should be a party, the inconveniences would be much greater. This being the only channel of communication with our military defences on the northern frontier along the St. Lawrence and the lower part of lake Ontario, it would put it in the power of the enemy, by sudden incursions which it would be impossible to foresee, and extremely difficult to provide against, to effectually impede the most important military operations; defeat the most salutary and necessary measures for the public defence, and thereby leave this whole frontier open and exposed to the most cruel and vexatious ravages of the enemy. The history of the last war, and the great sacrifices and sufferings of that frontier during that period, strongly attest the truth of these remarks. The proposed road being a more direct line of communication; more inland, and of course more defensible and secure, would remedy the existing evil by removing the present danger.

The construction of this road would also contribute largely towards the accomplishment of another object of great public good. The want of a direct and easy channel of communication between that extreme northeastern section of our state and our great commercial emporium, the city of New-York, has driven the commerce of that country to seek, through the channel of the St. Lawrence, a market in a foreign province. That commerce, therefore, is not only entirely lost to our own domestic market, but is there exposed to all the caprices of foreign policy, and all the vicissitudes of an ever-changing foreign legislation. The road in question, by the new facility of communication thereby afforded would, in some degree, divert that commerce from its present uncertain foreign market, and confine it within our own limits; thereby giving to our own merchants exclusively its profits, and to the state all the benefits arising from an increased transportation upon its canals and navigable waters; and all the advantages resulting from its consequent increased wealth and capital.

There is another point of view in which the committee think the construction of this road merits great consideration. The country through which it passes is perhaps the richest mineral region, not only in our own state, but in the United States. The hitherto unexplored sources of these mineral treasures, are now in a progress of successful developement. Enterprize, intelligence and capital, to a great extent, are already embarked in these operations. The numerous iron manufacturing establishments already formed upon the Au Sable river and its tributary streams, have collected around them an enterprising and interesting population—brought into existence several new and flourishing villages, and thereby created a market for agricultural and other products to a very considerable amount. These are now furnished, principally, and at a great profit to the producers, by the inhabitants of the adjoining state of Vermont.—Construct the road in question, and the same articles will be more readily and more advantageously supplied from our own fertile valley of the St. Lawrence. Our own agriculture will be thereby encouraged, and our own infant manufactures promoted. The committee feel that they need add nothing upon the subject of the importance of encouraging, in every possible way consistent with the general interests of the state, these manufactures. The iron mines of this region seem to be inexhaustible. And if, as the committee believe and hope, our country is hereafter to look mainly to our own domestic sources for a supply of this article of first necessity and extensive consumption—and if, as they believe, the region in question is capable of contributing most abundantly to that supply, it will be clearly manifest to every one how directly and deeply interested the state will be in these results, and how greatly she will profit by a consequent increase of her revenue and augmentation of her capital.

In every point of view, therefore, in which the committee have been enabled to contemplate this subject, whether they consider its immediate connexion with the common school fund and the importance of that fund—the increased facility of defence and consequent increased security of our northern frontier—the protection of the public revenue, and the securing to our own market the entire commerce of the state—the full developement of our mineral resources—the encouragement of our agriculture and promotion of our manufactures—and finally the consequent increased revenue, and augmented wealth and capital of the state, that may result from this internal improvement, all present strong reasons in favor of this application.

As to the location of the proposed road, such is the confidence of the committee in the intelligence and fidelity of the very respectable commissioners and surveyor employed in laying out and surveying the route for the road, and such appears to have been the diligence, patience and care exercised by them in the discharge of that duty, that the committee are well persuaded that its location is, all things considered, and particularly with reference to the important object, the improvement of the public lands, the most eligible possible.

Upon the subject of the expense of constructing this road, the committee also believe that the estimate thereof, made by the commissioners, under whose direction the road was laid out and surveyed, which estimate is contained in their report made to the legislature on the 7th of February, 1828, and to which reference has been already made, will be found to be correct. Should that expense exceed the appropriation asked for, the individual proprietors along the line of the road are willing to supply the deficiency.

Under all these considerations, and after a careful view of the whole subject, the committee are unanimously of opinion, that the prayer of the petitioners ought to be granted. They have, therefore, prepared a bill accordingly, and directed their chairman to ask leave to introduce the same.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Bradish, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act authorising the construction of a road from Port Kent in the county of Essex, to Hopkinton in the county of St. Lawrence, and making an appropriation therefor;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Ordered, That the usual number of copies of the said bill and report be printed for the use of the legislature.

Mr. W. Hall, from the committee on engrossed bills, reported, that they have examined the engrossed bill entitled "An act to provide for the payment of damages to real estate, in consequence of breaches in the canals of this state;" the engrossed bill entitled "An act to relieve the fourth ward of the city of Albany from a certain tax;" the engrossed bill entitled "An act to confirm a conveyance made by the administrators of Henry I. Moore, to John Ridley;" and the engrossed bill entitled "An act providing for the appointment of inspectors of unslaked lime in the county of Greene;" and find the said bills severally correctly engrossed.

The said engrossed bill, entitled "An act to provide for the payment of damages to real estate, in consequences of breaches in the canals of this state," was read the third time.

Resolved, That the bill do pass.

The said engrossed bill, entitled "An act to relieve the fourth ward of the city of Albany from a certain tax," was read the third time.

Resolved, That the bill do pass.

Ordered, That the clerk deliver the said bills to the Senate, and request their concurrence in the same.

On motion of Mr. Dygert,

Resolved, That the committee of the whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill for the relief of Nathan Underwood, and that the same, together with the accompanying documents, be referred to the surveyor-general; and that he be requested to report his opinion, as to the equity of the petitioner's claims to have a remission of interest.

Ordered, That Mr. Bogert and Mr. Vanderbilt be added to the select committee to which was referred the petition of the Marine society of the city of New-York, praying for the passage of a law to restore the fund created by the tax on seamen and passengers, to its proper purpose.

Ordered, That the committee on grievances be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Ezra Babcock and the administrators of Isaac Allen, praying legislative relief on account of the loss of a certain deed and mortgage, and that the said petition be referred to the committee on the judiciary.

Ordered, That the petition of sundry inhabitants of the town of Salina in the county of Onondaga, praying compensation for improvements made upon certain pasture lots in that village belonging to the state, together with the report of the surveyor-general on the said petition, be committed to a committee of the of the whole, when on the bill entitled "An act in relation to the salt manufacturing lots in the town of Salina, and for other purposes."

The annual report of the superintendent and inspector of the Onondaga salt springs, was read, in the words following, to wit:

Salina, January 15th, 1829.

SIR—

The superintendent and inspector of the Onondaga Salt Springs, transmit, enclosed, their annual report: and have the honor to be,

Very respectfully,
Your humble servants.
W. KIRKPATRICK, Superintendent.
JOHN MAYNARD, Inspector.

The Hon. Peter Robinson,
Speaker of the Assembly.

The superintendent and inspector at the Onondaga salt springs, in obedience to the act regulating the manufacture of salt in the town of Salina, have the honor to submit to the legislature the following report:

The amount of salt inspected in the town of Salina in the year 1826, was 827,508 bushels:

In the year 1827, 983,410 bushels:

And in the year 1828, ending on the 30th of November, 1,160,888 bushels.

A small difference appears in the amount of the two first mentioned years, from that formerly stated, arising from the month of November, which, in our last report, was stated separately, being annexed to the year to which it belonged, and a corresponding change being made in the previous year.

The number of manufactories has been considerably increased, and their condition greatly improved, during the year.

On the first day of January, 1828, the office of engineer of the salt springs ceased by law, and the duties of that office devolved on the superintendent. During the year ending on the 31st December, 1828, there has been paid for repairs and attendance, on the public pumps at Salina and Geddes, $1,948 96; and there has been received, during the same period, from the charge of two mills a bushel on the salt made from the water furnished from those pumps, $2,020 54.

The manufactories at the village of Liverpool, not being supplied with water from the public pumps, are not subject to this charge.

In compliance with the law which requires of us a recommendation of such measures as may, in our opinion, aid the manufacture of salt, we have on former occasions had the honor to suggest the propriety of a diminution of the duty at those limits where our salt meets and comes in competition with foreign salt. We again urge the propriety of that measure, and refer to our last annual report for some views of the subject.

The act passed April 21, 1828, renewing the leases of the salt manufacturing lots, in the town of Salina, will expire on the 20th of June, 1829.

All which is respectfully submitted.

W. KIRKPATRICK, Superintendent.
JOHN MAYNARD, Inspector.

January 15th, 1829.

Ordered, That the said report be laid upon the table.

Ordered, That the usual number of copies of the said report be printed for the use of the legislature.

been otherwise assisted during the last year, from the fund granted by the state for that purpose.

Admission into Union College.

Character.

Candidates are required to furnish evidence of their good moral character, and if from another college, a regular dismission or letter of request.

Age.

Sixteen years of age is requisite to admission: the candidate enters, however, any class for which he is qualified.

Payments.

There are three terms of study in each year, and the expense of each is paid in advance. Students, unless from another college, entering the Sophomore class, pay $7; the Junior $9; and the Senior $12; which is the only retrospective expense incurred by entering in advance.

Guardian.

All moneys intended for the use of students, are required to be transmitted to the college register, who acts as fiscal guardian in their behalf, and transmits to each parent, at the end of every term, a detailed account.

Annual Expense.

College bills, including board in the Hall,	$91 50
Fuel and light,	8 50
Washing,	6 00
Total,	$106 00

Students boarding out of the Hall, and students remaining in vacation, incur an additional expense for board.

The expense for clothing and pocket money, will vary according to the economy of individuals. A student who remains in vacation, may, with strict economy, clothe himself and pay all his other bills with less than $200. A student not strictly economical, and who travels in vacation, will require from $ to $ Charity Students—their Annual Expense.

College bills,	$1 50
Board in the Hall,	36 00
Wood and light,	6 00
Washing,	6 00
Total,	$49 50

Residence.

Rooms are assigned the students in the same edifices that are occupied by the president and professors and their respective families.

Instruction.

The Freshman Class, for the most part, constitutes a department in the academy, and is taught by the principal thereof. The other three classes are divided into sections, according to attainment, or choice of studies, and the several sections are instructed by the president and professors.

Government.

The government is, for the most part, parental and preventive, and devolves on the president and resident professors. Those students who do not cheerfully submit to it, are silently dismissed. No student is allowed to visit taverns or groceries; to be out of his room at night, or go out of town at any time, without permission; nor is any society allowed to hold their meetings at night.

Exercise.

The students are embodied and drilled, during play hours, by an experienced military officer. Gymnastic and other athletic exercises are encouraged, and ample grounds are furnished, free of expense, for those who prefer devoting their hours of recreation to agricultural pursuits.

Dress.

The dress of the students is a gray coat, with a standing collar; gray pantaloons and overcoat: all of domestic manufacture.

Commencement.

Commencement is on the 4th Wednesday in July; after which there is a vacation of eight weeks.

Vacations.

There are two other short vacations, the one sometime in December, the other in April. The seniors have no additional vacations, nor are there any holydays. It is desirable that students should either return home, or visit their friends during the vacations. And when parents cannot provide for this, the faculty should be apprized of it, that provision be made for their instruction and government at college.

Merit Roll.

An accurate and daily account of the delinquencies of every student, and also, of the degree of his attainment, in conduct, scholarship and attendance, is kept, and the summing up of these items determines the place of each upon the merit roll; a copy of which items is transmitted to the parent.

Examinations.

A committee is annually appointed, who examine the several classes, publicly, at the close of each term, and make a written report thereof.

Ordered, That the said report be laid upon the table.

Ordered, That the usual number of copies of the said report be printed for the use of the legislature.

In compliance with the resolution of this house of yesterday, requesting the Senate to return to this house the bill to alter the time of holding the annual town-meetings in the town of Pompey in the county of Onondaga, together with the amendments of the Senate thereto, the clerk of the Senate returned the said bill to this house.

The said bills were severally read the first time, and by unanimous consent were also read a second time, and the bill entitled "An act in addition to the act entitled 'An act concerning the revised statutes,' passed December 10th, 1828," was referred to a select committee, consisting of Mr. Bogert, Mr. Edgerton and Mr. Gross; and the bill entitled "An act concerning the election of justices of the peace," was referred to a select committee, consisting of Mr. Dana, Mr. Savage and Mr. Johnson, severally to consider and report thereon.

The Senate returned, by their clerk, the bill entitled "An act for the relief of the heirs of John Wilkinson;" the bill entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act for the disposal of lands ceded to the people of this state,' passed March 12th, 1823;" and the bill entitled "An act authorising Joseph Lounsbury and Rufus Lounsbury to erect a dam across the Susquehannah river."

Ordered, That the clerk deliver the said bills to the Governor.

The house then resolved itself into a committee of the whole, on the bill entitled "An act to amend the act to incorporate the Windham and Durham turnpike road company;" and after some time spent thereon, Mr. Speaker resumed the chair, and Mr. Gross, from the said committee, reported, that the committee had gone through the said bill, made an amendment thereto, and agreed to the same; which he was directed to report to the house, and he read the report in his place, and delivered the same in at the table, where it was again read, and agreed to by the house.

Ordered, That the bill be engrossed.

The house then resolved itself into a committee of the whole, on the bill entitled "An act for the relief of William Wisner;" and after some time spent thereon, Mr. Speaker resumed the chair, and Mr. Dyckman, from the said committee, reported progress, and asked for and obtained leave to sit again.

The petition of sundry inhabitants of the town of Naples in the county of Ontario, praying for the establishment of an additional supreme court clerk's office, to be located at Canandaigua, was read, and committed to a committee of the whole, when on the bill upon that subject.

The petition of Stephen W. Johnson junior, of the city of Albany, praying compensation for stationary furnished the executive of this state in the year 1827, was read, and referred to the committee on claims.

The memorial of Johannis Hornbeck and others, members of the consistories of the Dutch reformed churches in the towns of Rochester and Wawarsing in the county of Ulster, praying for the passage of a law to confirm a division of their parsonage, and to authorise them to sell a part of said parsonage, was read, and referred to the committee on the incorporation of charitable and religious societies.

The petition of Mary Roberts, wife of John Roberts, of the town of Vernon in the county of Oneida, praying to be divorced from her husband, was read, and referred to the committee on grievances.

The petition of sundry inhabitants of the counties of Oneida, Madison, Chenango and Broome, praying for the construction of the Chenango canal, was read, and committed to a committee of the whole, when on the bill entitled "An act authorising the construction of the Chenango canal."

Mr. Savage, from the committee on grievances, to which was referred the petition of Plyn Darby, reported:

That the petitioner, in the year 1826, undertook to excavate and make a part of section number 11, on that part of the Champlain canal between Fort Edward and Fort Miller: That on the 19th day of August in that year, whilst engaged in blasting rocks in the said canal, by an accidental discharge of a blast, he was so injured in his eyes as to be totally deprived of sight, and has no prospect of ever seeing again. The petitioner states that he has a large family to support, and being deprived of his sight, is unable to provide for them; therefore asks a bounty from the state.

However much the committee may feel for the petitioner's misfortunes, and his unpleasant situation in life, they are of the opinion that it is not for the legislature to grant relief, but that the petitioner should apply to that source which the law has provided for persons in his situation: They have therefore directed their chairman to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the prayer of the petitioner ought not to be granted, and that he have leave to withdraw his petition.

Thereupon,

Mr. Speaker put the question whether the house would agree to the said resolution, and it was determined in the affirmative.

Mr. Savage, from the committee on grievances, to which was referred the petition of Loyd Williams, reported:

That the committee have had the petition under consideration, and agree with the report of the canal commissioners in the fact, that the petitioner ought to have applied to the appraisers for damages, which is the proper tribunal for settling such application; and submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the petitioner have leave to withdraw his petition.

Thereupon,

Mr. Speaker put the question whether the house would agree to the said resolution, and it was determined in the affirmative.

Mr. Burt, from the committee on the establishment and improvement of roads and bridges, and the incorporation of turnpike companies, to which was referred the petition of the president, directors and company of the Coxsackie turnpike road, praying for an amendment to their act of incorporation, asked for leave to report by bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Burt, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to amend the act incorporating a turnpike road from Coxsackie to Freehold in the county of Greene, passed March 2d, 1805, and the several acts amending the same;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Austin, from the select committee to which was referred the petition of William Judson, Andrew Witbeck and John L. Sharp, praying for an extension of the act authorising them to maintain a ferry across the Hudson river at Coxsackie landing, reported:

By the act passed April 12th, 1820, the petitioners were authorised to maintain and keep a ferry across Hudson's river at Coxsackie landing, for the term of twelve years. The petitioners represent that they were unfortunate in the construction of their first horse-boat, and the same was much damaged by a steam-boat: That they have been to the expense of building a substantial wharf on the west side of said river, and are desirous of rebuilding the wharf on the east side of said river, and intend to make other important improvements on said ferry; but the income of said ferry has not remunerated them for expenses already incurred: Therefore the petitioners pray that an act may be passed, continuing to them the privilege of keeping said ferry for the term of twelve years from and after the first day of September 1832.

The committee believe the prayer of the petitioners to be reasonable, and have prepared a bill for that purpose, and directed their chairman to ask leave to introduce the same.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Austin, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act relative to the ferry between Nutten-hook and Coxsackie landing;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Dana, from the select committee to which was referred the engrossed bill from the Senate, entitled "An act concerning the election of justices of the peace," reported, that the committee have examined the said bill, and see no reason why the same should not be passed into a law.

Ordered, That the said bill be committed to a committee of the whole house.

The house then proceeded to the consideration of the report of the committee of the whole, on the bill entitled "An act authorising a loan to the Rochester high school;" the said report being, that the committee had gone through the said bill, and agreed to the same without amendment.

Mr. Speaker put the question whether the house would agree with the committee of the whole in their said report, and it was determined in the affirmative.

Ordered, That the bill be engrossed.

Ordered, That Mr. Morell have leave of absence for four days, Mr. Dygert for seven days, and Mr. M'Neil for seven days.

On motion of Mr. Savage,

Ordered, That the committee on grievances be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of George Hoag, and that the same be referred to the committee on the judiciary.

Mr. Dyckman gave notice that he would, on some future day, ask leave to introduce a bill, making provision for the support of the House of refuge for juvenile delinquents in the city of New-York.

The Senate returned, by their clerk, the bill entitled "An act authorising the overseers of the poor of the town of Saranac to pay over certain monies in their hands to the commissioners of common schools."

Ordered, That the clerk deliver the said bill to the Governor.

A message from the Senate, delivered by their clerk, with the bill therein mentioned, was read, informing that they have concurred with this house in their amendment to the amendment of the Senate to the bill entitled "An act to alter the time of holding the annual town-meetings in the town of Pompey in the county of Onondaga."

Ordered, That the clerk deliver the said bill to the Governor.

A message from the Senate, delivered by their clerk, with the bill therein mentioned, was read, informing that they have passed the bill entitled "An act relative to applications to the legislature for grants of escheated lands;" in which they request the concurrence of this house.

The said bill was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and referred to a select committee, consisting of Mr. Dana, Mr. Bradish and Mr. W. M'Donald, to consider and report thereon.

A message from the Governor, delivered by his private secretary, was read, in the words following, to wit:

TO THE ASSEMBLY.

GENTLEMEN,

I have this day approved and signed the following bills:

"An act to amend the act entitled 'An act for the disposal of lands ceded to the people of this state.'"

"An act for the relief of the heirs of John Wilkinson."

"An act authorising Joseph Lounsbury and Rufus Lounsbury to erect a dam across the Susquehannah river."

And then the house adjourned until eleven o'clock to-morrow morning.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 1829.

The House met pursuant to adjournment.

The petition of sundry masters and owners of vessels navigating the Hudson river, praying an amendment of the act requiring vessels at anchor in the Hudson to carry a light during the night, was read, and referred to a select committee, consisting of Mr. Starr, Mr. J. Van Beuren and Mr. Fowler.

Sundry affidavits and documents relating to the petition of Andrew P. Tillman, were read, and referred to the canal commissioners.

The petition of master builders and others of the city of Troy, praying for the passage of an act giving them a lien on buildings, the better to secure a remuneration for their labor and materials in erecting buildings, was read, and referred to the select committee upon that subject, of which Mr. Burt is chairman.

The petition of Jonathan Lapham and others, inspectors of elections of the town of Greenfield in the county of Saratoga, praying for the passage of a law to grant a commission, for the purpose of obtaining testimony in relation to frauds alleged to have been committed in that town at the late annual election, was read, and, with the accompanying affidavits, committed to a committee of the whole, when on the resolutions reported by the committee on privileges and elections, on that subject.

The petition of the Neptune insurance company of the city of New-York, praying for the passage of a law to authorise said company to augment its capital stock to the amount of five hundred thousand dollars, was read, and referred to the committee on the incorporation and alteration of the charters of banking and insurance companies.

The petition of Henry Becker, of the county of Onondaga, praying for compensation for services alleged to have been rendered during the revolutionary war, was read, and referred to the committee on claims.

The petition of sundry grocers and tavern-keepers of the city of New-York, praying for the passage of a law to compel venders of beer and cider to have their casks guaged, was read, and referred to the committee on trade and manufactures.

Two several petitions of sundry inhabitants of the counties of Tioga, Steuben, Yates, Ontario, Tompkins and Seneca, praying for the construction of a canal from the head of the Seneca lake to Newtown, was read, and referred to the committee of the whole, when on the bill upon that subject.

Mr. Paige, from the committee on the incorporation and alteration of the charters of banking and insurance companies, on the petition of the president, directors and company of the Fulton Bank of the city of New-York, praying an alteration of their charter, so far as to allow them to change the location of their banking house, asked leave to report by bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Paige, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to incorporate the president, directors and company of the Fulton Bank of the city of New-York;'" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Norton, from the select committee to which was referred the petition of Matthew Brown jun., for relief, reported:

That Francis Brown, now deceased, was, in 1814, associated with Hamlet Scrantum, as trustee of school district No. 2, in the village of Rochester, embracing parts of the towns of Gates and Brighton, which towns were then situated in different counties. That Nathaniel Rochester and others, gave to said school district, a lot for a school-house site, situate in the town of Gates; which lot is now estimated to be worth $3,000, exclusive of buildings. That said trustees proceeded to collect a tax imposed upon the freeholders of said district, for the building of a school-house, among which freeholders were Enos

Stone, Alva Stone and Moses Hall, all residing in the town of Brighton; who, subsequently to the collection of said tax, prosecuted said trustees, in the supreme court, for trespass, in collecting said tax, on the ground, as this committee have reason to believe, that the plaintiffs did not reside in the county in which said school-house was located. It appears that there was an ambiguity in the law, and that said trustees were advised by counsel that an action for trespass could not be sustained, and therefore they defended said suits; but before they were brought to issue, were satisfied that their counsel was mistaken, and they therefore settled the suits by paying plaintiff's costs, amounting in all, which was paid by said Francis Brown, to $105.51, after deducting $60 paid him by voluntary subscription. It does not appear that said trustees were guilty of any negligence in the discharge of their duties, and therefore it appears to the committee, that it is equitable that said trustees should be paid the amount of their liabilities, thus incurred, with the interest from the time paid. The said Hamlet Scrantum having been paid by means of the provision of an act passed by the legislature in 1823, this committee have nothing to do with his case. The petitioner has further asked for provision for the repayment of a tax of $101, levied upon his property for the building of the school-house on said lot, on the ground that the property taxed was subsequently, viz. in 1818, set off into a separate district, without having any part of said tax refunded to him, or sharing in any manner, in the benefit of the gift of the lot aforesaid, which had greatly increased in value. This part of the prayer of the petitioner the committee are unanimous in rejecting, inasmuch as the petitioner enjoyed the benefits of the building for four years, and there being no provision in the school act for relief after such enjoyment. The committee therefore ask leave to introduce a bill to provide for the repayment of the costs of the aforesaid suits only, to the petitioner, Matthew Brown jun., who is satisfactorily proven to be the legal representative of Francis Brown, deceased.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Norton according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Matthew Brown junior;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Dana, from the select committee to which was referred the engrossed bill from the Senate, entitled "An act relative to applications to the legislature for grants of escheated lands," reported, that they have examined the said bill, and see no reason why the same should not be passed into a law.

Ordered, That the said bill be committed to a committee of the whole house.

The annual report of Azariah C. Flagg, secretary of state, as superintendent of common schools, was read, in the words following, to wit:

STATE OF NEW-YORK—SECRETARY'S OFFICE.
Albany, February 6, 1829.

SIR,

Herewith is transmitted the annual report of the superintendent of common schools.

I have the honor to be, with much respect,
Your obedient servant,
A. C. FLAGG.

Hon. PETER ROBINSON,
Speaker of the Assembly.

STATE OF NEW-YORK,
SECRETARY'S OFFICE. } Albany, February 5, 1829.

The secretary of state respectfully submits to the legislature, the annual report required of him, as superintendent of common schools.

The revised statute relating to common schools, makes it the duty of the superintendent to prepare and submit to the legislature an annual report, containing,

"1. A statement of the condition of the common schools of the state:

"2. Estimates, and accounts of expenditures, of the school monies.:

"3. Plans for the improvement and management of the common school fund, and for the better organization of the common schools: And,

"4. All such matters relating to his office, and to the common schools, as he shall deem expedient to communicate."

I. As to the condition of the common schools:

There are 55 organized counties, and 757 towns and wards in the state; from all of which the reports in relation to common schools have been received.

The papers marked A. and B. are abstracts of the reports from the several towns and counties.

From these abstracts, it will be seen that there are in the towns which have made reports, 8,609 school districts, and consequently the like number of schools organized; and that returns have been received from 8,164 of those districts.

It appears also, that 311 new school districts have been formed during the year 1828; and that the number of districts which have made returns, exceeds that of the preceding year by 358.

That there are in the districts from which reports have been received, 449,-113 children between the ages of 5 and 15; and that in the common schools of the same districts, 468,205 scholars have been taught during the year 1828—the general average of instruction having been about 8 months.

The number of scholars instructed in the common schools, exceeds by 11,-775, the whole number of children between the ages of 5 and 15. This estimate does not include the scholars instructed in the cities of New-York and Albany, where the children between 5 and 15 are not reported.

The returns show an increase of 29,897 of the children between 5 and 15; and the number of children taught in the common schools of the state has increased 26,349, since the last annual report.

Under the present school system, the first returns were made in 1816. There were reported in that year 2,755 school districts, in which 140,106 children were instructed. The increase of school districts in 13 years has been 5,854; and the increase of the number of scholars instructed in the same period, has been 328,099.

The paper marked C. exhibits a comparative view of the returns from 1816 to the present time.

II. Estimates and expenditures of the school monies.

During the year 1828, two hundred and thirty-two thousand, three hundred and forty-three dollars and twenty-one cents, have been paid to the several school districts which have made reports. Of this sum, $100,000 were paid from the state treasury; $119,209 30 were raised by a tax upon the several towns in the state, and $13,133 91 were derived from a local fund, possessed by certain towns. The towns have raised by a voluntary tax, $19,209 30 more than were required to entitle them to the public monies.

The amount distributed among the several district schools, exceeds that of the preceding year, $9,347 44.

The productive capital of the common school fund has been increased, since the last annual report, $61,854 34, from the following sources, viz:

1. By the premium on the sale of $200,000 of Delaware and Hudson canal stock, amounting to $15,395 25.

2. In pursuance of the provisions of "An act in relation to public lands," passed April 21, 1828, sales have been made of escheated lots, in the military tract, during the past season, to the amount of $13,233 06.

3. Sales of other lands belonging to the school fund, have been made during the year, amounting to $33,226 04.

The productive capital of the common school fund now amounts to $1,684,-628 80.

The revenue actually received into the treasury, on account of the common school fund for the past year, has been $89,034 96; leaving a deficit in the amount annually distributed, of $10,965 04, to be supplied from the general funds of the state. The revenue of the next year is estimated by the Comptroller, at $105,200. (See statement D.)

In addition to this fund, the constitution provides that "the proceeds of all lands belonging to this state, which shall be hereafter sold or disposed of, shall belong to the fund for the support of common schools." The lands embraced in this provision, are computed by the Surveyor-General, at 869,178 acres; and although much of this land is rough, and at present inaccessible, the receipts from this source must in a few years, make the total school fund at least two millions of dollars.

In several of the counties there is a local fund for the use of schools. This fund is derived from reservations made by the state for the use of schools, in granting certain tracts of land. The paper marked E. is an exhibit of the reserved lots, and of the portions which have become productive. Seventy-four towns are reported as having participated in this local fund, the total revenue of which for the last year, has been $13,133 91.

III. The management of the common school fund, &c.

The common school fund is embraced in the general system for managing the revenues of the state, and the care of the lands appropriated to this fund is vested in the commissioners of the land-office. By an act passed April 18, 1826, provision is made for the re-investment of the capital of the school fund, whenever the same comes into the treasury, in any of the stocks of this state; and the commissioners of the canal fund are required to issue stock for the same "on the most advantageous terms that stock may be issued by them to any person or body corporate, taking any part of the said loans."

That portion of the capital of the common school fund, which had been paid into the treasury as stated in the report of the comptroller in 1828, has been vested in the stock issued to the Delaware and Hudson canal company, at a premium of $7,766 63, upon $100,000 of 5 per cent. stock. The premium in this case goes into the school fund, as provided by the act under which the stock was issued. There is now in the treasury, $70,446 24, being capital paid in, and which is to be invested.

By the act above referred to, it is made the duty of the comptroller to invest in the stocks of the state, the capital of the common school fund, which may hereafter be paid into the treasury; and the commissioners of the canal fund, in making loans, are to issue stock for the same on terms as advantageous as to any person taking any part of such loans. The operations of trade, and the convenience of these stocks for making remittances to foreign countries, often induce individuals to pay a premium beyond that which could be considered judicious in making an investment for a permanent fund. It is respectfully recommended, that whenever loans are to be made by the commissioners of the canal fund, that they be authorised to issue 5 per cent. stock at par, for any amount of the capital of the common school fund which may be in the treasury; and that provision be made to vest the capital paid into the treasury, in the stocks of the state, whenever it can be done at the par value thereof.

The canal stock belonging to the school fund bears an interest of 5 per cent.: the loans of 1792 and 1786, are at 7 per cent.; and the loan of 1808 at 6 per cent. The dividend on that portion of the fund which consists of bank stock, has been 6 per cent.

IV. The organization of the common schools.

The character and usefulness of the common schools mainly depend upon the qualifications of teachers. In this particular there is much room for improvement. The attention of the legislature was particularly directed to this point in the annual report of the superintendent in 1827, and to which he now begs leave to refer.

There are now required more than 8,600 teachers to supply the district schools of the state. To meet this demand, reliance must be placed, in a considerable degree, upon the higher seminaries of learning in the state; and it is gratifying to observe by the last annual report of the Regents of the University, that the importance of making the academies in some measure nurseries of teachers for the common schools, has received the favorable attention of that body. There are now about 50 academies interspersed in different counties in the state, at which more than 3,000 scholars are instructed.

The following extract from the last annual report of the Regents, has an important bearing upon the interests of the common schools, and gives assurance of the co-operation of the academies in elevating the character of the common schools by multiplying the number of qualified teachers.

"The academies have become, in the opinion of the Regents, what it has been always desirable they should be, fit seminaries for imparting instruction in the higher branches of English education, and especially for qualifying teachers of common schools, as well as for preparing students in classical studies, preliminary to a collegiate course. For this elevation and degree of usefulness to which our academies have thus happily attained, they are chiefly indebted to the munificence of the legislature; first, in the original establishment of the literature fund, for the special encouragement of these institutions; and next, in the gradual increase of that fund from time to time, until by the extraordinary and most liberal endowment of $150,000, made by the act of April last, the fund has become of such magnitude as to enable the Regents to distribute to every academy entitled to participate in it, a dividend sufficient, with the aid of ordinary tuition money and other revenues, to secure the services of the most able teachers, and thereby to enable the several institutions to fulfil all the beneficial ends for which they were established.

"The legislature having, by the act before referred to, declared it to be one of their primary objects in the great increase made by them of the literature fund, 'to promote the education of teachers,' the Regents, equally with the legislature, being impressed with a sense of the paramount importance of this great object, will always cheerfully co-operate in promoting its speedy accomplishment."

But all the advantages anticipated from training persons to become teachers will be lost, unless the inhabitants of the districts are willing to make such compensation as will secure the services of persons thus qualified. The miserable economy which not unfrequently prevails, of employing cheap teachers, without reference to their fitness, has a tendency to depress, rather than to elevate the standard of education in our common schools.

It is necessary to impress upon the minds of the inhabitants of the districts, the necessity and utility of giving a higher character to education in the common schools, before any effective improvement can be made.

Those who object to the employment of able teachers on account of a trifling addition in the expense, might be supposed to be destitute of the means of sending their children to schools of a higher grade: they therefore have the strongest interest so to improve the district schools, as to ensure to their children as good an education as can be acquired by those who are placed in the best schools by their more wealthy parents. To those whose wealth gives them access to the academies and colleges, the state of the common schools cannot be so essential; but to the great mass of our population, whose means of instruction are limited to the common schools, it is all important that those schools should be furnished with able instructors, and afford the means of acquiring all the substantial branches of an useful education.

The inspectors of the several towns can exercise an important influence in improving the character and condition of the common schools. The statute makes it their duty to visit each school at least once a year. The schools ought to be visited once at least in each quarter, which has been recommended by the superintendent in the appendix to the school act. In the forms accompanying the revised statute, trustees are required to state in their annual reports, whether the schools have been inspected or not. The first returns, although very imperfect, show conclusively that inspectors of schools are, to a very great extent, remiss in this part of their duty. They find some apology for this neglect, in the uncertainty, by the present regulations, of any compensation for their services; but provision is made in the revised laws, after 1830, for paying the inspectors one dollar per day for their services, and after that period it will not be unreasonable to insist upon a punctual discharge of this very important duty.

The forms for school returns which were published with the revised statute, also provide for reporting the amount paid in the several districts for teachers' wages, over and above the school monies apportioned to the districts. It could not have been expected that full returns would be made the first year, as many districts were not in possession of the new law in time to complete the reports. The returns which have been received, are from various towns in 51 counties, and the sum thus ascertained, compared with the amount of public money paid to the same districts, affords a very fair test for ascertaining the proportion paid by the inhabitants of the districts for teachers' wages. Taking these returns as a test, and it appears that $336,643 have been paid for teachers' wages, besides the $232,343 of public money apportioned to the districts the last year; making a total amount paid annually for tuition in the common school districts of the state, of $568,986. The paper marked F. contains an abstract of these returns.

The paper marked G. shows the gain and loss in the several counties, of the number of children taught, and also of the number of children between 5 and 15, compared with the returns of last year. In some instances, the trustees made returns of the children between 5 and 16, which makes the proportional increase appear more unfavorable to the number instructed, than it really is.

The 23d annual report of the public school society in the city of New-York, gives a gratifying account of the usefulness and excellent character of the schools under the charge of that society. The number of schools, and the facilities for imparting common school instruction, are, however, most clearly inadequate to the wants of the city. It was estimated three or four years since, by those who possessed the best means of judging, that there were then seven thousand children between the ages of 5 and 15, who were deprived of school instruction altogether. The trustees of the public school society have recommended that the means of extending the benefits of their school system should be furnished by a general tax upon the city. In the country towns, schoolhouses are erected and furnished with necessary fuel and appendages, by a direct tax upon the property of the district; and this principle might with equal justice and propriety be extended to the cities. In the state at large, the policy of the law is, to apply the school monies exclusively for teachers' wages, and to tax the inhabitants for all other necessary expenditures connected with the schools. In New-York, about $18,000 have been paid to the public school society for the last year, and the whole amount of teachers' wages paid by the trustees, is about $10,500. Thus it is probable, that 7 or 8,000 dollars of the school monies are annually applied to the erection of school-houses, and furnishing them with necessary appendages, at a time when there may be from 7 to 10,000 children in the city who are without school accommodations. It appears by the report of the trustees, that "the purchase of lots and erection of additional school-houses, occasions an annual increase of the permanent debt incurred by the society, which debt now amounts to $60,000, secured by mortgages on its valuable premises." School-houses, instead of being mortgaged to individuals or corporations, ought, at least for the future, to be erected by a direct assessment, and perpetually set apart for school purposes, and secured against casualties. These remarks apply to the policy of the law, and in no respect to the management of the trustees of the public school society, whose zeal and devotion to the interests of education, are deserving of all praise.

As a measure preparatory to extending the means of common school instruction in the city of New-York, it is respectfully recommended that provision be made by law for enumerating the number of children taught in all the schools in the city, as well as the number of children between 5 and 16. This might be done at a trifling expense during the next season, and would afford the necessary information to enable the legislature to act understandingly upon the subject.

Returns have been received of the condition of the common schools, from the commissioners of every town and city in the state. In former years, it was not unusual to have 15 or 20 towns delinquent. It is gratifying to notice this evidence of increased attention and punctuality on the part of those who are charged with the execution of the statute: And when it is considered that there are at least 46,000 officers of common schools in the towns and districts, the fidelity with which the public money is applied and accounted for, and the faithfulness with which the system is carried into effect, are creditable to the character of our population. Much credit is also due to the county clerks, generally, for the accuracy, neatness, and punctuality with which their returns are made.

All which is respectfully submitted,

A. C. FLAGG,
Superintendent of Common Schools.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Johnson, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to incorporate the Scottsville canal company;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Myers, from the committee to which was referred so much of the Governor's message as relates to auctions and the auction system, reported:

That they have given the subject a full, and, as they believe, an impartial examination, regarding both the revenue derived to the state from that branch of trade, and its useful application, and also the interest of that class of merchants and traders who complain that their business is affected by auction sales, and also against what they consider a mercantile monopoly.

It appears to be the wish of the legislature to grant all possible relief to the commercial interests of the state, as also to preserve the large revenue which is derived from public sales; to be deprived of which, would render it necessary to devise other means of making up the deficit, by some other indirect or direct system of taxation on the people. And in order to place the case fairly before the house, it may be necessary to make some remaks on the mercantile transactions of this as well as of other countries, which are transacted by numerous grades of merchants, from the importers of foreign goods, down to the retailers who supply the immediate wants of the consumers: The regular importing wholesale merchant, the jobbers, auctioneers, and agents of foreign and domestic manufacturers, the speculators and retailers, all of whom have rights, and claim the protection of the state. And the committee are of opinion that each class contributes their proportion of taxes.

The regular importers, jobbers, speculators and auctioneers, are assessed in common with other citizens, on their real and personal estate and public stocks, and thereby bear a due proportion of the public burthens. But the foreign agents of manufacturing and mercantile establishments in Europe, are exempt from the above taxes. Most of them are single men, and aliens, who resort to this country for the declared and express purposes of collecting or securing debts due their respective establishments, and for the purpose of vending goods which are sent to them on consignment. Most of them are in the habit of living at boarding-houses, neither hiring houses, stores, or employing clerks, as they generally dispose of their goods at public sales, which enables them to make speedy remittances. On the arrival of their goods, their general practice is, to hand over their invoices and endorsed bills of lading to their auctioneer, leaving it to him to enter their goods at the custom-house and give bonds for the duties. Auctioneers are in the habit of making advances on goods so placed under their control, to an amount equal to two-thirds of their value, and to pay the balance on sales as soon as they are made out, which enables the agent to make an immediate remittance to the shippers.

Merchandize so imported, are advertised to be sold at public auction on a certain day, to the highest bidder, either by the package or in smaller parcels. If by the package, catalogues are made out, and the goods are exposed to view at the auction stores, at least one day previous to the sale, by which means purchasers have an opportunity of examining the same, as respects pattern, fabric, colors, length and breadth; and if sold in less parcels than packages, the goods are exposed upon the shelves ot the auction stores.

Agents, and other non-resident consignees, are relieved from all expenses attending sales, excepting the charges made by the auctioneers, and hence arises a serious objection, brought by a class of merchants known as jobbers, against the whole auction system. But the committee beg leave to submit, whether they are not subject to at least as heavy a taxation in another way.

We will suppose an agent receives on consignment, or imports on his own account, $50,000 worth of merchandize, in the course of a year, and the same are taken from the ship to the auction, and there disposed of to the highest bidder, by the package, at the lowest rate of duty, which, if imported from ports beyond the Cape of Good Hope, at one per cent. on the amount of sales, amounts to a duty of $500; and if the same amount is imported from Europe or the West Indies, and sold in like manner, the duties being one and a half per cent. on such sales, amounts to $750; or if consisting of wines, or ardent spirits of any description, the duties being two per cent., amounts to $1,000: And thus, according to the amount imported and sold, whether more or less, in the same ratio, which renders it probable that agents and consignees, who neither hire houses, stores or clerks, contribute as largely to the public coffers as the generality of our resident merchants or jobbers; the latter class being those who most complain of being affected by the auction system.

This latter class of traders are numerous and respectable in our large cities, employing considerable capitals, and are worthy of consideration. They are an intermediate grade of merchants, between the wholesale and importing merchants and the retail shopkeepers, about equal in grade to the auctioneers. They purchase largely at auctions, at the package sales, from wholesale importers, and in such other ways as they can obtain merchandize on reasonable terms. Some of them are also importers to a limited extent, and others occasionally receive goods on consignment; their purchases at public sales being sufficiently large to add much to the evil of which they complain. For unless they were purchasers, the auction sales would be but small, compared to what they now are: And it does appear to the committee, that were there no auctions, the manufacturing and shipping houses in Europe, would still, at the end of each season, after having completed all regular orders, ship on their own account, the remains of their stock on hand, to the best markets they could find, and that such goods as have been manufactured for the American market, would find their way to our sea-ports; and from the circumstance of there being no auctions, even if not sought for by the jobbers, which is altogether doubtful, they would be offered to them on such terms as would induce them to become purchasers.

The committee are of opinion, that merchants, by reason of their profession, are not bound to abstain from selling inferior, or even bad goods, for what they in reality are; but they are morally bound not to deceive innocent purchasers, by recommending them for what they are not. And the committee are of opinion, that it does not follow, that if the auctions were discontinued by reason of high duties or other restrictions, imposed either by the United States, or state government, that our country would be supplied with goods superior to those which we now receive; because a large proportion of the goods shipped to this country, are manufactured expressly for the American market, according to samples sent out and directions given. And the committee are further of opinion, that were there no auctions, the same goods, as respects quality and quantity, would be sent to, and sold in this country. The jobbers filling the space vacated by the auctioneers, the public would be no better served than at present. The state revenue would be the only loser, and the jobbing merchants the only gainers by the change. It then rests with the legislature to decide, whether they will stand with folded arms, and suffer a revenue of $257,000 per annum to be wrested from them without using every exertion in their power to preserve it. If so, it will become necessary to provide means to supply the deficit by taxation, or in some other way, as the whole of the aforesaid revenue stands pledged for the redemption of the canal debt, and to the support of public institutions.

It is alleged that merchandize of all descriptions are sold at auction, in dark rooms and crowded companies, and that they are struck off so quick as not to allow sufficient time for purchasers to examine what they are buying, which is a fact to a certain extent; but the difficulty is in some measure removed by the previous exposure of the goods for examination as before mentioned, and also by the three days allowed after each sale, as allowed by common custom, for the examination; within which time, goods sold as perfect, and of specific lengths, breadths and qualities, if found to differ from the terms of sale, in either of these respects, they are returned, or retained on the purchaser's receiving such deductions as may be agreed on at his option. And under this consideration, the committee are of opinion that the auction business, when conducted by honorable men, is as free from the charge of fraud and deception as private sales, and that both are open to fraud and deception, if conducted by a different description of men.

It is also urged that auctions offer an inducement to agents and other importers, to commit frauds on the revenue of the United States, by invoicing their goods below their real value, the amount of duty saved enabling them to dispose of their goods at low rates at auction. It is believed that this charge is well founded, to a limited extent, so far as it respects dishonest importers; and although the committee are sensible that the violation of law and common honesty, has a demoralising effect on the state of society, yet they are inclined to believe that the evil is not so extensive as many imagine; and when it is recollected that the national government has guarded its revenue by the appointment of appraisers, whose duty it is to open and examine every package of goods, at the public store previous to the importers receiving them, it is believed that few, if any, such frauds are committed; and were there no auctions, frauds on the revenue would sometimes be committed in this, as well as every other country.

It is believed by many respectable merchants and others, that the present auction law is objectionable inasmuch as it creates a mercantile monopoly, by confining an extensive branch of business to a small and limited number of auctioneers, to the exclusion of other citizens of equal claims.

It is also alleged by reputable merchants and traders, who are worthy of consideration, that the mode of disposing of goods, both at package and other sales, favor the commission of frauds by not allowing sufficient time or opportunity for examination of the goods. They also object to the practice of auctioneers advertising a certain quantity of goods, which is believed to be all they have of those particular articles, when it often happens, that if the goods bring a good price, ten times the quantities are sold by sample, lot after lot, until the price falls so low that there is no further inducement to continue the sale, leaving those who purchased the first parcels unable to compete with those who afterwards purchased at reduced prices.

The committee, in order to remedy the evils complained of, are of opinion that any citizen of the United States, of approved character, who could give security for the payment of duties to the state, licensed as auctioneers in the cities and counties wherein they reside, it would destroy the monopoly complained of, in a manner satisfactory to the public: and are also of opinion that auctioneers should be compelled by law, to advertise all the goods they intend selling at each sale, and that no additional parcels shall be sold by sample; and that all goods intended to be sold at auction, at package sales, should be exposed to view in the stores or warehouses, at least three days previous to a sale; and that all goods, wares and merchandize, sold at public auction as perfect, and of specific descriptions, shall be considered so warranted by the auctioneer; and if found to differ from such warranty, within three days after purchase, the same should be returned to such auctioneer. That all goods, wares and merchandize, sold from the shelf in less quantities than original packages, shall be exposed for examination in the auction stores from sun-rise on the day of sale, and subject to be returned within three days after the sale for either of the causes, as set forth in cases where goods are sold at package sales.

And in order to secure the revenue of the state, and insure a faithful performance of duty on the part of the auctioneers, and a full compliance with the laws regulating sales by auction, it is expedient that a superintendent of auctions should be appointed by the comptroller of this state, to reside in the city of New-York, to receive the quarterly accounts of auctioneers, and to examine the same by their books of original entry; and also to report to the comptroller, from time to time, the names of such auctioneers, who shall or may, in any respect, violate the law regulating sales at auction. And the committee are of opinion, that a law embracing the the principles of this report, would effectually preserve the revenue of the state, and satisfy every reasonable demand of the merchants who feel aggrieved by the present mode of conducting auction business; and they have therefore directed their chairman to prepare a bill, which he now asks leave to present.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Myers, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to amend the first title of the seventeenth chapter of the first part of the revised statutes;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Ordered, That the usual number of copies of the said bill and report be printed for the use of the legislature.

Mr. Dayton, from the select committee to which was recommitted the engrossed bill from the Senate, entitled "An act concerning marine insurance in the state of New-York," reported, that the committee have again examined the said bill, and recommend that it be passed into a law.

Ordered, That the said bill be recommitted to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Garnsey, from the select committee to which was referred the engrossed bill from the Senate, entitled "An act to incorporate the village of Lockport," reported, that the committee have examined the said bill, and see no reason why the same should not be passed into a law.

Ordered, That the said bill be committed to a committee of the whole house.

The annual report of Ebenezer Hunt, an inspector of sole leather for the county of Tompkins, was read, in the words following, to wit:

In compliance with the act of the legislature in such case made and provided, I, Ebenezer Hunt, inspector of sole leather for the county of Tompkins, do make report as follows:

That during the year ending on the 31st day of January 1829, I have inspected 2,447 sides of sole leather bearing the inspection of good, weighing 34,258 lbs.; and 153 sides damaged, weighing 2,142 lbs. The fees for the same received, amount to $104. That the value of the said leather is probably $8,-221.92. That the manufacturers are improving in the quality of their leather; and it is believed sole leather will be manufactured in this village during the ensuing year, equal to any manufactured in this state.

Given under my hand, at Ithaca, January 31, 1829.

EBENEZER HUNT.

Ordered, That the said report be laid upon the table.

A communication from the surveyor-general was read, in the words following, to wit:

The surveyor-general, on the petition of John H. Lathrop and Orin Palmer, referred to him by the Honorable the Assembly, respectfully reports:

That the act entitled "An act to authorise the sale of certain lands therein mentioned, by the people of this state," passed March 10th, 1827, authorised the commissioners of the land-office to convey in fee, on the conditions mentioned in the act, the lot of twenty-five acres of land in the town of Salina, leased by the superintendent of the salt springs to Moses D. Rose, to the grantees of the estate conveyed to him by said lease. When the lands in the salt springs reservation were allotted for sale, it was found that it would be for the public interest to alter the location and shape of this lot, so as to admit of a more regular and advantageous allotment of the ground surrounding it, than could otherwise be made. This was agreed to by the parties interested, and recommended by the superintendent of the salt springs. Of this the legislature was not advised when the act was passed. It will therefore be necessary so to amend the act as to make its execution practicable; which may be done, by authorising the grant intended by the act to be made, "with such bounds as were surveyed for the ground held under the lease, when allotments of the adjacent ground were made by the authority of the surveyor-general." To have the act so amended, is the prayer of the petitionere, which it is obvious ought to be granted.

Respectfully submitted,

SIMEON DE WITT, Surveyor-General.

Ordered, That the said communication be laid upon the table.

Ordered, That Mr. Willey have leave of absence for 10 days, and Mr. Allison for seven days.

town of Greenfield, praying that a commission be granted for the purpose of obtaining testimony in relation to frauds alleged to have been committed in that town at the late annual election, and the accompanying affidavits, be re-committed to the committee on privileges and elections.

Thereupon,

Ordered, That the said petition be committed to a committee of the whole, when on the bill entitled "An act to amend the revised statutes, so far as they relate to the standard of measures of capacity;" and that the usual number of copies thereof be printed for the use of the legislature.

The petition of Eliza Ann Babcock, of the city of Albany, praying for the passage of a law to change her name to Eliza Ann Seeley, was read, and referred to a select committee, consisting of Mr. Starr, Mr. Stanton and Mr. Gardner.

The memorial of sundry inhabitants of the counties of Broome and Otsego, praying for the incorporation of a company for the purpose of improving the navigation of the Susquehannah and Chemung rivers, and for other purposes, was read, and referred to the select committee on that subject, of which Mr. Mann is chairman.

The petition of sundry inhabitants of the town of Kirkland in the county of Oneida, praying for a division of that town, and for the erection of a new town by the name of Canning, was read, and referred to the committee on the erection and division of towns and counties.

The petition of sundry inhabitants of the county of Genesee, praying for the repeal of the act passed at the last session of the legislature, which authorises the laying out of a road from Lima to Bethany, was read, and referred to the committee on the establishment and improvement of roads and bridges, and the incorporation of turnpike companies.

Mr. Mann, from the select committee to which was referred sundry memorials from the citizens of the counties of Otsego, Delaware, and parts of Chenango and Broome, praying for the passage of a law incorporating the Susquehannah and Chemung navigation and rail-road company, reported:

That they have bestowed some attention on the object of these very numerous and highly respectable memorialists as developed in their petitions; and although they apply for the incorporation of an individual association, yet it has appeared to the committee that the purpose which they design to accomplish is one of great public utility and general interest, demanding the favorable consideration which the wisdom of the legislature always affords to promote the welfare of our community. The petitioners represent that the design of this association is to connect the Otsego lake (from which proceeds the east branch of the Susquehannah river,) with the Erie canal at Fort Plain, in the county of Montgomery, by means of a rail-road nineteen miles in length, and to improve the navigation of the Susquehannah river by means of dams and locks, to the line of this state, and thence up the west branch to the Chemung river, including the same as far as Bath, in the county of Steuben. This contemplated improvement, as it is represented, would accommodate a population of more than three hundred thousand citizens including all the large and populous villages situate on the Susquehannah river and its tributary branches, with the facilities of a cheap conveyance for their surplus products, their manufactures, lumber, iron, coal, marble, salt and gypsum.

It has appeared satisfactory to the committee, that by this proposed improvement, the citizens of those counties watered by the Susquehannah and its branches, can approach "tide waters" in passing a less distance and with more facility than on any other route yet proposed or contemplated for their benefit, embracing and uniting as it does all the advantages and interests of the various projects contemplated for the union of those waters with the grand canal.

Of the practicability of this improvement, little doubt is entertained. In reference to this inquiry, the committee have been referred to the detailed report of Col. De Witt Clinton, jr., engineer, made in the year 1827, and found in the journals of the Assembly for that year, which as far as the same can be relied on, shows that this contemplated improvement can be accomplished for a reasonable expenditure proportioned to the benefits which might be expected to accrue from such a work. Experienced and observing men have pronounced the Susquehannah river from Cooperstown to Tioga point, one of the most favorable streams for a slack water navigation in this country; and Judge Wright says in his report to the Senate in 1826, "that nature has formed a valley extending from the foot of Otsego lake down the river to Tioga Point, and thence up the Chemung river to Bath, in Steuben county, a distance of two hundred and twenty miles, where a canal may be constructed at a small expense, and by connecting it with the Delaware and Hudson canal, it will be only second in importance to the Erie canal."

The union of the Chemung river with the Seneca lake by either the Chemung canal or the proposed connection through the Crooked lake, would complete an extensive chain of inland navigation connected with this enterprise and the canals of Pennsylvania.

The petitioners represent that a steam-boat navigation on the Susquehannah river may be obtained without hazardous or ruinous expenditures, and that they are fully convinced that the inducements to the completion of the proposed improvements are so palpable, that capitalists will afford them all the means necessary to the accomplishment of their patriotic purposes. Although it was not strictly necessary, the committee have made some general inquiries as to the cost of this work, and the benefits which might reasonably be expected from its accomplishment. Scrutinizing these points with that rigid and practical severity which is so requisite to arrive at truth on all such occasions, and taking caution from the lessons of experience, the committee are induced, on general principles, to conclude that the cost of this improvement will not so far outstrip the practical benefits to be derived by its incomes, as to render its success abortive or delusory. That transportation can be done on a slack water navigation cheaper and with more facility than on a canal, is a point long since conceded; and while the expense of the construction of such a navigation is ordinarily greatly diminished below the construction of canal navigation, it should be borne in mind, that a navigation subject to a rise of water continues longer and opens earlier than canals.

The policy of the state which encourages individual enterprise in the accomplishmeat of great improvements, merits some consideration. The message of his excellency the Governor on this subject, cannot have failed to meet the most cordial approbation of every disinterested and firm friend of the state.

That individual efforts, cherished and fostered by the protecting arm of public authority, are fully adequate to the accomplishment of great undertakings of this kind, has been forcibly illustrated not only in transatlantic countries, but in several prominent instances within our own jurisdiction.

That works can be performed under the constant stimulous of individual interest, which promotes rigid economy, for much less expenditure than by the efforts of a government under any system of accountability yet invented or known in political science, must appear obvious to every reflecting man.

Governments must always act by their agents, whose interest and cupidity are naturally opposed to them; and the warning voice of every political patriotic writer, speaks to all governments, to avoid as far as possible the multiplication of occasions for bargaining with individuals. In all instances where governments have undertaken the business of production by manufacturing, carrying on agriculture or commerce, although they have enjoyed all the facilities of capital, a failure of the design has ensued. History is replete with facts to illustrate this remark.

The committee are aware that a contrary sentiment has prevailed, and found many advocates, that all internal improvements should be the peculiar work of the government; that such corporations are dangerous aristocracies, and that public debts contracted for such improvements, are not like those which arise from war or public calamity, inasmuch as they produce the means of wealth to our citizens in the benefits of the works which they create. The policy of our sister states of Ohio and Pennsylvania, is appealed to with exultation, as affording examples of bold daring in the march of the empire. Many of these advocates have tasted the sweets flowing from the treasury of the people of this state, in the construction of her unparalleled works of internal improvements; and it is no longer then wonderful that their tongues are fired with eloquence in favor of the continuance of such showering blessings.

Need we appeal to the voice of wisdom, confirmed by experience, to prove that public debts, more particularly in this union of free states, contracted for whatever cause or necessity, are always inauspicious to public prosperity?

Governments always supply their coffers directly or indirectly from the people. Let us again turn our attention to the condition of our sister states of Ohio and Pennsylvania, to see whether their bold example should inspire us with courage or caution. But recently Ohio was receiving the full tide of emigration, wealth and enterprise from the east; it is now diverted to another country. The sale of her lands is almost ceasing, although the price is diminished by her landholders; and in numerous instances have they abandoned their property, to be, if possible, disposed of by the government, to raise the exactions due to the treasury. A degree of public alarm prevails, and if emigrations from Ohio farther west, should be the consequence, that alarm would not be altogether groundless.

Pennsylvania is beginning to feel that her condition is somewhat similar to that of New-England, soon after the revolution, borne down by the burthens which necessarily followed the achievement of her independence. Her population poured into the western wilds, and peopled the state of New-York, because they had little inducement to remain where public exactions consumed so large a portion of their surplus income.

The western states open themselves to the youthful enterprise of Pennsylvania, and she may well fear that the inducements they afford to her sons for a residence, and the exercise of free industry, in preference to their native land, will prove seductive to her wealth and political prosperity. From these examples, let us learn prudence.

Can the people of this state desire their government to be involved in public debts, insomuch that citizens of foreign states or countries will refuse a residence among us? We trust not: And then the policy of cherishing the enterprise of individual capitalists and companies, in the construction of works of internal improvement, becomes apparent.

The committee are aware that the project of this association has, by some, been considered as hostile to the contemplated Chenango canal; but they are well assured, by gentlemen representing the county of Otsego, that it is not so intended. Indeed, it would appear to the committee, that the superior magnitude of the object would effectually forbid such an inference.

The committee are unanimously of opinion that the prayer of the petitioners ought to be granted; and they have accordingly instructed their chairman to ask for leave to introduce a bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Mann, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to incorporate the Susquehannah and Chemung navigation and rail-road company;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Ordered, That the usual number of copies of the said bill and report be printed for the use of the legislature.

Mr. Fitch, from the select committee to which was referred the petition of the commissioners appointed to superintend the erection of a new court-house and jail in the county of Broome, reported:

That the petitioners represent, that by an act of last year, the supervisors of said county of Broome are required to raise the sum of 5,000 dollars, for the purpose of erecting a new court-house and jail in said county, in five equal annual instalments: That at the last meeting of the board, the sum of 1,000 dollars was assessed; and that the circumstance that the remaining 4,000 dollars is to be received in extended instalments, will very much embarrass them in the execution of their trust. They further represent, that the sum of 5,000 dollars is likely to prove insufficient for the purpose. They therefore pray that they may be authorised to borrow the remaining sum of 4,000 dollars upon the credit of the county, and apply the monies arising from the sale of the old court-house and jail, in aid of the sum already provided, for the erecting and completing the new ones.

The committee are of opinion that the facts set forth are true, and that the prayer of the petitioners is reasonable, and ought to be granted. They have accordingly prepared a bill, and directed their chairman to ask leave to introduce the same.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Fitch, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act to provide for the erection of a new court-house and jail in the county of Broome;'" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Johnson, from the select committee to which was referred the report of Robert R. Henry, an inspector of pot and pearl ashes, reported:

That in their opinion, it is only necessary to have entered upon the journals, so much of said report as is contained on the first page, and on the second to the word "Independently;" and that the residue of the report does not deserve any farther consideration.

Mr. Speaker put the question whether the house would agree with the committee in their said report, and it was determined in the affirmative.

Mr. T. L. Smith, from the select committee to which was referred the engrossed bill from the Senate, entitled "An act for the relief of John Griffiths and Eleanor Griffiths," reported, that they have examined the said bill, and see no reason why the same should not be passed into a law.

Ordered, That the said bill be committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Savage, from the select committee to which was referred the engrossed bill from the Senate, entitled "An act to continue in force the act incorporating the Ancient Britons' benefit society of the village of Utica," reported, that they have examined the said bill, and see no reason why the same should not be passed into a law.

Ordered, That the said bill be committed to a committee of the whole house.

A communication from the secretary of state was read, in the words following, to wit:

STATE OF NEW-YORK—SECRETARY'S OFFICE.
Albany, February 7, 1829.

SIR,

I beg leave to present the enclosed communication to the house over which you have the honor of presiding.

I am, with much respect,
Your obedient servant,
A. C. FLAGG.

Hon. PETER ROBINSON,
Speaker of the Assembly.

STATE OF NEW-YORK,
SECRETARY'S OFFICE. } Albany, February 7, 1829.

The secretary of state respectfully submits to the legislature, the propriety of transferring to the comptroller's office, the appraisements of damages on the canals, and the papers connected therewith, which have been deposited in this office in pursuance of resolutions of the Assembly, (See Assembly Journals of 1827, page 1051.) By the present arrangement in the comptroller's office, the books and papers connected with the canals are kept in a separate room, called the "canal room;" and the business of that department is assigned to the clerk of the canal board. It seems proper, therefore, that the reports of the appraisers should be deposited with the other papers relating to the canals.

The secretary of state also respectfully suggests to the legislature, the propriety of transferring to the office of the register in chancery, the writings, records, and proceedings remaining in the office of the court of probates at the time it was abolished; and which, by "An act respecting the court of probates," passed March 21st, 1823, were deposited in this office for safe keeping. By the act above referred to, abolishing the court of probates, it is provided, (section 5,) "that all appeals, suits, judgments, and decrees now depending or being before the court of probates, shall be, and are hereby transferred to the court of chancery; and such proceedings shall be had thereon, as might have been had in the court of probates, if this act had not been passed." And the third section authorises an appeal from the decisions of surrogates, to the chancellor. From these provisions, it would seem as if the register's office was the appropriate place of deposit for these papers.

All of which is respectfully submitted,
A. C. FLAGG.

Ordered, That so much of the said communication as relates to canal documents, be referred to the committee on canals and internal improvements; and that so much as relates to the writings, records, and proceedings of the court of probates, be referred to the committee on the judiciary.

A message from the Senate, delivered by their clerk, with the bill and amendments therein mentioned, was read, informing that they have passed the bill entitled "An act relating to the purchase of lands from the First Christian and Orchard parties of the Oneida Indians," with the amendments therewith delivered.

The said bill and amendments were read; and the amendments having been again read, were concurred in by the house, and the bill amended accordingly.

Ordered, That the clerk deliver the said bill and amendments to the Senate, and inform them that this house have concurred with them in their amendments to the said bill, and have amended the same accordingly.

On motion of Mr. Tower,

Resolved, That the comptroller be requested to report to this house, the amount of monies belonging to the canal fund, which have accrued over expenditures, interest on loans, &c. and which must eventually be applied to the payment of the debt contracted for the construction of the Erie and Champlain canals, and how the same is now invested.

Ordered, That Mr. Sanford have leave of absence for two weeks, Mr. P. Van Beuren for two days, and Mr. Taber for two days.

On motion of Mr. Mathews,

Ordered, That the report of the surveyor-general on the petition of John H. Lathrop and Orin Palmer, together with the documents accompanying the same, be referred to the committee on claims.

The house then again resolved itself into a committee of the whole, on the bill entitled "An act authorising the construction of the Chenango canal;" and after some time spent thereon, Mr. Speaker resumed the chair, and Mr. J. Van Beuren, from the said committee, reported progress, and asked for and obtained leave to sit again.

And then the House adjourned until ten o'clock to-morrow morning.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 1829.

The House met pursuant to adjournment.

Sundry petitions and remonstrances relative to a division of the town of Romulus, in the county of Seneca, were read, and referred to the committee on the erection and division of towns and counties.

The petition of sundry inhabitants of the town of Clay, in the county of Onondaga, relative to lowering the waters of the Oneida lake and improving the navigation of the Oneida river, was read, and ordered to be laid upon the table.

Two several petitions of sundry inhabitants of the counties of Herkimer and Otsego, praying for the incorporation of the Susquehannah and Chemung navigation and rail-road company, were read, and committed to the committee of the whole when on the bill upon that subject.

The petition of Samuel Crippen and others, inhabitants of the town of Milford, in the county of Otsego, praying for a renewal of the act authorising John Low to maintain a dam across the Susquehannah river in said town, was read, and referred to the committee on the establishment and improvement of roads and bridges, and the incorporation of turnpike companies.

The petition of sundry persons residing at and near the head of the Seneca lake, praying for the passage of a law directing the canal commissioners to reduce the waters of the said lake to a level with its outlet, was read, and referred to the committee on canals and internal improvements.

The petition of Seth Wetmore, of the county of Montgomery, praying for legislative relief in relation to a contract entered into by him, with certain commissioners of the state, for the construction of a road through the state lands in the north part of said county, was read, and referred to a select committee, consisting of Mr. Randall, Mr. J. Hall and Mr. Spier.

The petition of Stephen Warren and others, citizens of the city of Troy, praying for an act of incorporation for the purpose of supplying said city with good and wholesome water, was read, and referred to the committee on the incorporation and alteration of the charters of banking and insurance companies.

The petition of sundry mechanics and builders of the county of Monroe, praying for the passage of a law to give them a lien upon buildings which they may erect, was read, and referred to the select committee on that subject, of which Mr. Burt is chairman.

Mr. Skinner, from the committee on colleges, academies and common schools, to which was referred the petition of the trustees of school district No. 1, formed from parts of the towns of Dansville and Burns, in the counties of Allegany and Steuben, reported:

That the petitioners state, that in the year 1827, Edward Rowen set up a claim to the lot of ground upon which the school-house in their district had been erected, and to which the district had a valid title by deed, duly recorded: That the said Rowen took possession of the school-house: That a school meeting was called, and a vote taken to proceed against the said Rowen, under the act in relation to forcible entries and detainers, and to raise the sum of ten dollars, by a tax on the district, to defray the expense: That the said Rowen was removed by a proceeding under the said act, and immediately commenced a suit against the said trustees, in the Allegany county court, for assault and battery, trespass and false imprisonment; which, after having been put over several terms, was tried, and a verdict and judgment rendered for the defendants: That a bill of expense was incurred by the trustees, in obtaining witnesses, and attending court, &c., to the amount of about fifty dollars: That they have not been able to obtain a vote of the district to raise the money. They therefore pray that an act may be passed to levy a tax on the district, or that the school-house may be sold for the purpose, as it is not located in the centre of the district.

The school act defines very clearly the powers of a district meeting, and the duties of the trustees. The legislature have not thought proper to give power to a district school meeting, to levy a tax on the inhabitants, for the purpose of maintaining or defending suits; nor is it among the duties required of the trustees, by the act, to commence suits on behalf of the district. Persons undertaking the duties of an office, must be presumed acquainted with the law from which they derive their authority to act. The vote of the meeting to raise money for the purpose of defending their title, was not authorised by the act.

This may be a hard case for the trustees, and one which addresses itself to the liberality of the inhabitants of the district; but the committee are of opinion, that the granting of this petition would be a very bad precedent, which might lead to many trifling applications to the legislature upon the same ground. They have therefore directed their chairman to report to the house the following resolution:

Resolved, That the petitioners have leave to withdraw their petition.

Thereupon,

Mr. Speaker put the question whether the house would agree to the said resolution, and it was determined in the affirmative.

Mr. Fillmore, from the select committee to which was referred the petition of sundry inhabitants of the town of Aurora in the county of Erie, reported:

That the following facts appear by said petition, (the truth of which the committee have no reason to doubt,) to wit: That there are in said town of Aurora several large and expensive bridges, situated on important roads leading across the western and middle branches of the Buffalo creek: That the said town has for some years past, raised by tax as large a sum as the present law will permit them to raise, and found the same insufficient to defray the expenses of building said bridges, and keeping them in repair: That there is now in the hands of the overseers of the poor of said town, the sum of about three hundred and fifty dollars, belonging to the poor funds of said town; and that there is not now, nor has there been for some time past, any paupers chargeable to, or supported by said town. The petitioners therefore pray that a law may be passed, authorising and requiring the overseers of the poor of said town, to pay over so much of said money now remaining in their hands, to the commissioners of highways of said town, as the inhabitants thereof, at their town meeting, shall by vote direct, to be by said commissioners expended in like manner as other moneys coming into their hands are by law to be expended.

However sacred this fund should in general be held, yet under the circumstances of this case, where there appears to be no special object in want of this charitable fund, or likely to require it, as it is a notorious fact that the said county has lately erected a poor-house; and where the conveniences of the town and public at large will be greatly promoted by applying a part of it to the repairs of the bridges in said town, which without it will soon be impassable; the committee are of opinion that the prayer of the petitioners ought to be granted, and have directed their chairman to ask leave to introduce a bill accordingly.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Fillmore, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to authorise the overseers of the poor of the town of Aurora in the county of Erie, to pay over certain monies to the commissioners of highways of said town;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Starr, from the select committee to which was referred the petition of sundry masters and owners of vessels and steam-boats navigating the Hudson river, praying the passage of a law requiring vessels lying at anchor in the harbor of New-York to show a light during the night, reported:

That a law was passed in 1826, making it the duty of all vessels lying at anchor in the Hudson river north of Fort Gansevoort, to show a light at night: That it is evident to the committee, that both vessels and cargoes are frequently exposed to damage in entering and leaving the harbor of New-York, for the want of the same precaution. The committee have therefore prepared a bill in conformity with the prayer of the petitioners, and directed their chairman to ask leave to introduce the same.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Starr, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act for the regulation of vessels lying at anchor in the harbor of New-York;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Bogert, from the select committee to which was referred the engrossed bill from the Senate, entitled "An act in addition to the act entitled 'An act concerning the revised statutes,' passed December 10th, 1828," reported, that the committee have examined the said bill, and see no reason why the same should not be passed into a law.

Ordered, That the said bill be committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Falley, from the select committee to which was referred the engrossed bill from the Senate, entitled "An act for the relief of purchasers on the Selkirk tract in the county of Oswego," reported, that the committee have examined the said bill, and see no reason why the same should not be passed into a law.

Ordered, That the said bill be committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. M'Crea, from the select committee to which was referred the engrossed bill from the Senate, entitled "An act to change the name and style of the First Presbyterian church and society in Roxbury," reported, that they have examined the said bill, and see no reason why the same should not be passed into a law.

Ordered, That the said bill be committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Boynton, from the select committee to which was referred the engrossed bill from the Senate, entitled "An act for the relief of the representatives or devisees of Robert Adams deceased," reported, that the committee have examined the said bill, and see no reason why the same should not be passed into a law.

Ordered, That the said bill be committed to a committee of the whole house.

The petition of the trustees of school district number 8 in the town of York in the county of Livingston, praying for a certain amendment to the law passed at the last session of the legislature, entitled "An act authorising the trustees of school district number 8 in the town of York, to sell the old school lot belonging to said district," was read, and referred to the committee on colleges, academies and common schools.

The petition of sundry inhabitants of the counties of Franklin and St. Lawrence; praying that pecuniary relief may be afforded to Lemuel Warren, a contractor in the construction of a road through the St. Regis reservation, was read, and referred to the committee on claims.

The petition of Conway Smith, an alien, praying for the passage of an act authorising him to purchase, take, hold, and convey real estate, was read, and referred to the committee on the petitions of aliens.

The petition of sundry inhabitants of the county of Cortland, praying for the passage of an act authorising the construction of the Chenango canal, was read, and referred to the committee of the whole, when on the bill upon that subject.

Mr. Skinner, from the committee on colleges, academies and common schools, to whom was referred the petition of Addison Porter and others, of the village of Catskill, praying that an act may be passed, authorising the trustees of school district number 1 in that town, to receive pay for the tuition and fuel of pay scholars in said district in advance, reported:

That it appears from the petition, that the trustees of said district have been put to some inconvenience, and have sustained some loss in collecting the wages of the teachers, and the pay for fuel, on account of the great number of scholars taught in the district, and the small sums due from each.

From the facts stated, the committee have been unable to discover any good reason for varying the law applicable to this district, from the general law regulating common schools. Ample provision is made in the school act, for collecting the wages of teachers, and pay for fuel. The committee think the law on the subject ought to be uniform, and they ask leave to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the petitioners have leave to withdraw their petition.

Thereupon,

Mr. Speaker put the question whether the house would agree to the said resolution, and it was determined in the affirmative.

Mr. E. Baker, from the committee on the establishment and improvement of roads and bridges, and the incorporation of turnpike companies, to which was referred the petition of sundry inhabitants of the county of Tioga and Tompkins, praying for an act of incorporation for the purpose of constructing a turnpike road from Ithaca to Havana, asked for leave to report by bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. E. Baker, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to incorporate the Ithaca and Havana turnpike road company;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Johnson, from the committee on canals and internal improvements, to which was referred the communication from the secretary of state of the 7th February, relative to sundry documents concerning the appraisement of damages on the canals, reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That the secretary of state be directed to transfer to the comptroller's office, the appraisement of damages on canals, and the papers connected therewith, deposited in his office by virtue of resolutions of the Assembly at the session of 1827.

Mr. Speaker put the question whether the house would agree to the said resolution, and it was determined in the affirmative.

Mr. Dana, from the committee on courts of justice, to which was referred the bill entitled "An act to relieve the county of Cayuga from the expenses of maintaining William L. Perce in the jail of said county," reported, that the committee have examined the said bill; and that in their opinion, it would be inexpedient to pass a general law, making provision for cases similar to those contained in the bill referred to them. They recommend that the bill be recommitted to a committee of the whole.

Thereupon,

Ordered, That the said bill be recommitted to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Soper, from the committee on the judiciary, to whom was referred the petition of Ezra Babcock, Nathan Benson, Sylvanus Larned, Jacob H. Thompson and Susan his wife, reported:

That in the year 1818, the said Ezra Babcock made a parol agreement with Isaac Allen, late of the town of Groton in the county of Tompkins, since deceased, for the purchase of about fifty acres of land, situate in the town of Locke in the county of Cayuga, for which he was to pay about three hundred dollars: That during said year, he paid one hundred and fifty dollars of said sum; and on the nineteenth day of April 1819, the said Isaac Allen executed to the said Ezra Babcock a deed in fee for said land, and the said Ezra Babcock executed to the said Isaac Allen a bond and mortgage on the same, to secure the payment of the residue of the purchase money: That said deed and mortgage were not delivered, but left in the hands of Henry Kenedy, to be acknowledged by their respective wives: That the wife of the said Isaac Allen acknowledged said deed; but the wife of the said Ezra Babcock did not acknowledge said mortgage: That in the spring of 1820, the said Henry Kenedy removed to the westward, and afterwards sent the said deed and mortgage by his brother to the said Isaac Allen: That in the month of March 1825, the said Isaac Allen died, leaving several children who are yet within the age of twenty-one years: That the said Ezra Babcock paid the greater part of said purchase money to the said Isaac Allen in his lifetime, and the balance (about eighteen dollars) he has since paid to the other petitioners, who have administered upon the estate of the said Isaac Allen: And that diligent search has been made for said deed, but the same cannot be found.

Upon the above statement of facts, the petitioners pray that an act may be passed, authorising the administrators of the said Isaac Allen to convey the said premises in fee to the said Ezra Babcock.

The committee are of opinion that the above facts do not present a case requiring legislative aid, inasmuch as the relief sought for can be obtained by resorting to a court of equity. They therefore ask leave to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That the petitioners have leave to withdraw their petition.

Thereupon,

Mr. Speaker put the question whether the house would agree to the said resolution, and it was determined in the affirmative.

Mr. Keith, from the committee on the establishment and improvement of roads and bridges, and the incorporation of turnpike companies, to which was referred the petition of the president, directors and company of the Watervliet road company, praying for permission to abandon a portion of their road at its northern termination, asked for leave to report by bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Keith, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act concerning the Watervliet turnpike company;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Edgerton, from the committee on privileges and elections, to which was recommitted the petition and documents relating to the election in the town of Greenfield, reported:

That they have had again under their consideration the subject and the additional documents submitted to them, and see no reason to alter their former report on the same subject.

Ordered, That the said report and documents be recommitted to a committee of the whole, and that the same be the special order of the day for Monday next.

Mr. Fitch, from the select committee to which was referred the memorial of the board of supervisors of the county of Broome, reported:

That the petitioners represent that the clerk's office of said county is situated in a compact part of the village of Binghamton, and nearly in the centre of a large block of buildings partly composed of wood, thereby rendering the office and its contents very liable to destruction by fire: That the public ground upon which a new court-house and jail are about to be erected, is spacious, and removed a safe and convenient distance from all other edifices, and entirely under the control of said board. They further represent that the old clerk's office can be sold for a sum sufficient to erect a new one upon the public ground aforesaid, and adjacent to the contemplated new court-house and jail. They therefore pray that commissioners may be appointed by an act of the legislature, with authority to sell the present clerk's office, and erect a new one near the new court-house and jail aforesaid.

The committee are of opinion that the facts set forth by the memorialists are true, and that their prayer is reasonable and ought to be granted, and have directed their chairman to ask leave to introduce a bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Fitch, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act relative to the clerk's office in the county of Broome;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Fillmore, from the select committee to which was referred the petition of Joseph Howard junior, and others, reported:

That it appears from said petition, the truth of which is verified by the certificate of the trustees of school district number one in the town of Aurora and county of Erie, that said district were the owners of a certain piece of land, which had been conveyed to their predecessors in office, for a lot on which to erect a school-house in said district: That a school-house had been built thereon, and occupied by said district, until a little more than a year since, when the house had become so dilapidated that it was found necessary to erect a new one: That the inhabitants of said district were of opinion that a better site for a school-house could be procured than this, as it was situated so near the centre of business in the village, that the school was frequently interrupted by noise; and they accordingly got the consent of the school commissioners to remove the site, and voted to remove the same: That they there voted that the old lot should be sold to the one who would give the most for it; and it was accordingly sold to the said Joseph Howard junior, for the sum of 84 dollars, and conveyed to him by a quit claim deed from the trustees of said district; and that the consideration money therefor has been duly paid by him to the trustees of said district, and by them duly applied towards the building of the new school-house: But on investigation, it was found that the said district could not convey their real estate, without being specially authorised by an act of the legislature; and therefore, as well the trustees as the inhabitants of said district, have united with the said Joseph Howard junior, in his petition, praying that said conveyance may be confirmed and rendered valid by an act of the legislature: And the committee are of opinion that justice and equity require that the prayer of the petitioners should be granted, and have directed their chairman to ask leave to introduce a bill accordingly.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Fillmore, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to confirm the conveyance of a certain piece of land therein mentioned, to Joseph Howard junior;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. L. Smith, from the select committee consisting of the members attending this house from the county of Onondaga, to which was referred the engrossed bill from the Senate, entitled "An act to divide the town of Camillus in the county of Onondaga," reported, that they have examined the said bill, and see no reason why the same should not be passed into a law.

Ordered, That the said bill be committed to a committee of the whole house.

A communication from the surveyor-general was read, in the words following, to wit:

The surveyor-general, on the petition of Jonathan Wheat, referred to him by the Honorable the Assembly, reports:

That in pursuance of the act, ch. 210, passed April 15th, 1826, an appraisement was made of the value of the permanent improvements made by Jonathan Wheat, to the mills at the Oswego falls, belonging to the state, above the rent reserved in his lease of the premises; and said Wheat to be remunerated to that amount, out of the proceeds of the sale of the mills with the necessary ground about them. Since which, that ground has been laid out, and the residue of the ground allotted, and all advertised and exposed for sale on the 6th of last May, in the usual manner, taking the minimum prices from the valuations of the surveyor. The sales of the village lots amounted to $2,830: of which, $815.20 was then paid into the treasury; but no bid was received on the mill-sites, the value of which, in public estimation, has been lessened by the erection of other hydraulic privileges in the neighborhood, by means of the canalling operations there.

When the act was passed, it was doubtless believed that the mill-site would meet with a ready sale, and that the petitioner would not remain long without the intended remuneration. Failing, however, in such an expectation, he applies to the legislature for relief; and prays, that instead of leaving him dependent on the contingency of the sale of the mill-site, he may receive what is due to him from the avails of the other lands of the reservation; and for this, he reposes himself on the justice and wisdom of the legislature. The uniform hardship of his case seems to entitle it to a favorable consideration.

Respectfully submitted,

SIMEON DE WITT, Surveyor-General.

February 11, 1829.

Ordered, That the said communication, together with the documents accompanying the same, be referred to the committee on claims.

Ordered, That the said report be laid upon the table.

The annual report of John Stoddard, an inspector of pot and pearl ashes for the city and county of Albany, was read, in the words following, to wit:

To the Honorable the Speaker of the Assembly of the State of New-York, &c. &c.

John Stoddard, inspector of pot and pearl ashes for the city and county of Albany, makes the following report:

Has inspected, from February 1st, 1828, to February 1st, 1829, one thousand five hundred and ninety-four barrels of pot and pearl ashes; nearly one fourth were pearl ashes, the rest were pot ashes.

Deducting cash paid out for labour, rent of store, taxes, extra cooper's bill, &c. amount of fees actually received is five hundred and one dollars and seventy-six cents.

There are less number of barrels of ashes inspected this year, by about five hundred barrels, than there was from 1st February 1827, to 1st February 1828: Besides, the barrels, by the new revised laws of December 1827, November 1828, have in general been smaller, and the fees of course less; many barrels in worse order; ashes generally that have been made by the manufacturers, were much better in quality, less quantity of second and third sorts, but few condemned, to what there has been for several years past.

The amendment to the inspection law of pot and pearl ashes, will improve the barrels both for the benefit of the purchasers and exporters. The low price of ashes until late last fall, has been the cause (probably) that less number of barrels of ashes have been made than for some years before.

Ordered, That the said report be laid upon the table.

Ordered, That the usual number of copies of the said report be printed for the use of the legislature.

The annual report of Nathaniel Wilson, an inspector of beef and pork for the county of Greene, was read, in the words following, to wit:

Mr. Armstrong, from the committee on the erection and division of towns and counties, to which was referred the petition of the inhabitants of the town of Romulus, praying for a division of said town, together with several remonstrances against the application, reported:

That they have had the petition and remonstrances under consideration; but inasmuch as no evidence is presented to the committee that the requisite notices have been given, they are of opinion that the prayer of the petitioners ought not to be granted. They therefore recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the petitioners have leave to withdraw their petition.

Thereupon,

Mr. Speaker put the question whether the house would agree to the said resolution, and it was determined in the affirmative.

Mr. Armstrong, from the committee on the erection and division of towns and counties, on the petition of sundry inhabitants of the town of Kirkland in the county of Oneida, praying for the division of that town, together with sundry remonstrances against the same, asked leave to report by bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Armstrong, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to divide the town of Kirkland in the county of Oneida;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Burt, from the committee on the establishment and improvement of roads and bridges, and the incorporation of turnpike companies, to which was referred the petition of sundry inhabitants of the county of Cayuga, praying for the incorporation of a company for the purpose of constructing a rail-road from the village of Auburn to Port Byron on the Erie canal, reported:

That citizens residing in the village of Auburn and its vicinity, are desirous of constructing a rail road from said village to the village of Port Byron, on the Erie canal, a distance of about seven miles. The committee feeling a disposition to recommend that encouragement should be given to improvements which will tend to bring forth the enterprise and activity of our citizens in improvements, which renders the conveniences of transporting the fruits of their industry to market, by every facility within the resources of man's invention. The practical operation and effect of the rail road system is not generally known to many of our citizens, it is but few years since the subject has been one of much inquiry, but so far as has been developed, is received with universal approbation of its future usefulness where the location is a suitable one for operations of that kind.

The rail road it is said, is of a simple structure, and its advantages are so manifest, that it is remarkable that it has not been sooner introduced into extensive use. The advantages which it possesses for giving an easy motion to heavily loaded carriages, arises from the even and unyielding surface of the iron-rail on which the wheels of the carriages travel. The committee in recommending this project, are governed by such explanations as to the location, as to believe it to be a proper one. It will be perceived, that although the most level route is the best suited to the rail road, an absolute level is not required, as in the case of a canal. In building the rail road, however. as in laying out a canal, it will be expedient to bring the line of the road as near to a level, by the choice of the route, as circumstances will admit. The question, as well as some others of less moment, in relation to the construction of the road, may be safely left to be determined, on more full inquiry and mature consideration, by those who may be entrusted with the execution of the work. It appears to the committee, that sufficient inducements should be held out to enlist in such works the enterprize of individuals who may be willing to secure the interests of the public, while at the same time have made a sufficient investment of capital for the successful completion of the enterprize.

The amount of property, as stated to the committee, transported from the village of Auburn to the Erie canal, is estimated to be about six thousand tons, which is now necessarily transported over a common road, sometimes attended with much delay and expense. It may also be proper to take into view the additional amount necessary for the use of the state prison at that place, which must of itself be a very important item in sustaining the interests of those who may invest their funds in this useful enterprize.

The benefits resulting from transporting property upon rail roads, over the ordinary roads, is easily to be foreseen, resulting from safety as well as depatch, where a country is similar situated to the one between the Erie canal and Port Byron. The committee believe the experiments should first be made, as it is but a short distance, and presents a fair compensation as to the expense of its construction, to its proprietors after completion.

The committee having lately seen a publication in relation to a new invention of a rail road waggon, and the test of its utility having been witnessed by competent judges, who became satisfied of its complete success, it is stated, that upon a well made level road, that a horse can pull thirty tons with great ease four miles an hour.

At a time when rail road improvements are projected on a large scale, in many of our sister states, the committee think the state of New-York should not be backward in bringing to light the genius of her citizens to a successful trial of their skill, enterprize and ingenuity.

The committee are assured by respectable persons, that there can be no doubt as to the stock of the company being taken by persons possessing the means, and will prosecute the improvement until its final completion. They have therefore prepared a bill and directed their chairman to ask leave to introduce the same.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Burt, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to incorporate the Port Byron and Auburn rail-road company;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Ordered, That the usual number of copies of the said bill and report be printed for the use of the legislature.

Mr. Hubbard, from the committee on the establishment and improvement of roads and bridges, and the incorporation of turnpike companies, to which was referred the petition of sundry inhabitants of the counties of Genesee, Cattaraugus, Erie and Chautauque, praying for the appointment of commissioners to lay out a certain road from Canadaway in the county of Chautauque, to Perry in the county of Genesee, asked for leave to report by bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Hubbard, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to appoint commissioners to lay out a highway from Canadaway in the county of Chautauque, to Perry in the county of Genesee;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Randall, from the select committee to whom was referred the petition of Seth Wetmore, of the county of Montgomery, praying legislative aid in relation to a contract entered into by him with certain commissioners appointed under the act entitled "An act to lay out and improve a road from Chase's patent to Lake Pleasant, in the county of Montgomery," passed April 16th, 1825, reported:

That the following facts, as represented by the petitioner, appear to the committee to be substantially true:

In January, 1826, the petitioner contracted with the above mentioned commissioners to construct a road from Chase's patent to Lake Pleasant, through lands then supposed to belong to the state; a distance of about thirty-six miles, in the northerly part of Montgomery county. The consideration to be received by the petitioner for making and improving said road, as provided in the said act, was to be in lands, at the rate of 320 acres for every mile of road so constructed, and to be located by a designation of every alternate lot through which the said road was to pass. After the survey and location of the road, by the commissioners, was completed, it was discovered that the state had not title to all the lands through which the road was laid, and consequently, that the lands to be set apart to pay for constructing the same, could not be selected as was contemplated by the original act.

On a representation of these facts to the legislature, an amendment to the said act was passed April 14, 1827, authorising the surveyor-general to designate, for the purposes mentioned in the original act, other lands in a tract called the Oxbow tract. It also appears, that on the 25th day of January, 1826, and in July of the same year, the petitioner purchased of this state, at auction, 5,417 acres of land in the same Oxbow tract, in 28 several parcels, in lots No. 133, 148, 68, 139, 103, 71, 215, 153, 182, 158, 162, 160, 180, 147, 183, 142, 193, 73, 169, 141, 178, 145, 149, 164, 150, 175, 192, 222, at an aggregate of $1,517 03; of which the petitioner has paid, of principal, $237 17, and of interest, $95 80.

Fourteen miles of said road have been completed to the acceptance of the commissioners, as appears by their reports.

The petitioner asks the passage of a law authorising the surveyor-general to designate such portion of the lands purchased at auction as aforesaid, and not paid for, to be patented to him, for completing said road, when the same shall be made and accepted, in lieu of other lands in the same Oxbow tract, which must otherwise be designated; and that he may be relieved from the further payment of money on such purchases.

The petitioner offers the following among other reasons, for making this application, to wit: The facilities which he has and is affording, by opening the road and introducing settlers on lands belonging to the state in that region of country, and the impulse which his efforts have given to sales of those lands, have been peculiarly beneficial to the state. Upwards of 30,000 acres of land have been sold in that vicinity by the surveyor-general, besides those purchased by the petitioner, since his contract for making the road above mentioned. He will not be able to sell his lands by lots, without a sacrifice, while the state lands can be purchased at their present appraised value. The changes which hove recently taken place in his private relations, and the pecuniary embarrassments in which he is involved, on account of those purchases, not only render it extremely doubtful whether he can be able to complete his contract for making the road, without the relief sought, but threatens him with utter ruin in his pecuniary circumstances.

He has paid nearly one-sixth part of the principal on those purchases, besides interest. There will be due the petitioner, when the road shall have been completed, about 7,400 acres of land. There remains of the lands under his purchase at auction, and unpaid for, 4,514 acres, at an average price of nearly 35½ cents per acre, leaving yet to be designated, in pursuance of the original act and the amendment thereto, about 2,886 acres of land.

The committee, after having examined the truth of the facts stated, and reasons offered, and having duly considered the same, are of opinion that the prayer of the petitioner is not an unreasonable one, and ought, under the circumstances, to be granted. They have therefore prepared a bill, and directed their chairman to ask leave to introduce the same.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Randall, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Seth Wetmore, in relation to his purchase of certain lands of this state, and for other purposes;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Ordered, That the usual number of copies of the said bill and report be printed for the use of the legislature.

Mr. J. Hall, from the select committee to which was referred the memorial and resolutions of the board of supervisors of the county of Onondaga, reported:

That in pursuance of an act entitled "An act to authorise the erection of a new court-house and jail in the county of Onondaga," passed April 5th, 1828, the board of supervisors of said county have proceeded to fix a site for the said court-house and jail in the village of Syracuse, and have appointed a building committee, who have commenced the erection of the said building, and have nearly completed the jail: That by the act aforesaid, the said board was authorised to raise the sum of ten thousand dollars, to be expended in the erection of said buildings; which sum has in part been raised and expended: And that the said building committee have estimated the probable expense of completing said buildings, at fifteen thousand dollars in addition to the aforesaid sum of ten thousand; and that the said board of supervisors have petitioned for the passage of a law authorising and requiring the said board to borrow on the credit of the county, a sum not exceeding fifteen thousand dollars, for the purpose of completing the said court-house and jail; and that they be authorised to cause the same to be assessed, levied and collected, by such instalments, and at such times, as the said board shall deem expedient.

The committee are of opinion, that from the representation of the said board of supervisors, it would be proper to pass a law, authorising the said board to raise the sum of ten thousand dollars, to be laid out and expended in completing thecourt-house and jail in said county; and have prepared a bill, which they ask leave to present.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. J. Hall, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to authorise the board of supervisors of the county of Onondaga to borrow the sum of ten thousand dollars, for the purpose of completing the court-house and jail in said county;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Norton, from the select committee to which was committed the bill entitled "An act authorising a loan to the Rochester high school," reported, that the committee had gone through the said bill, made an amendment thereto, and agreed to the same; which he was directed to report to the house, and he read the report in his place, and delivered the same in at the table, where it was again read, and agreed to by the house.

Ordered, That the bill be engrossed.

The house then proceeded to the consideration of the resolution heretofore offered by Mr. Edgerton, which was again read, in the words following, to wit:

Resolved, (if the Senate concur herein,) That this Legislature will, on the 14th instant, at 12 o'clock at noon, proceed to the choice of a secretary of state, treasurer, surveyor-general, commissary-general, and one regent of the university of this state.

Mr. Speaker put the question whether the house would agree to the said resolution, and it was determined in the affirmative.

Ordered, That the clerk deliver a copy of the preceding resolution to the Senate, and request their concurrence in the same.

A message from the Governor, delivered by his private secretary, was read, in the words following, to wit:

TO THE SENATE AND ASSEMBLY.

GENTLEMEN—

I have the honor to communicate to you the annual report of the Governors of the New-York Hospital.

MARTIN VAN BUREN.

Albany, 12*th February*, 1829.

TO THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF NEW-YORK, IN SENATE AND ASSEMBLY CONVENED.

The Governors of the New-York Hospital, respectfully report:

That during the year 1828, there have been 1,805 patients admitted into the hospital; and with the 187 patients remaining on the 31st December, 1827, make the number of 1,992 patients, who have received the benefit of the institution during the year 1828.

Of that number, 1,376 patients have been cured, 123 relieved, 56 have been discharged at their own request, or that of their friends, and 31 as improper objects; 25 have eloped or been discharged as disorderly, 193 have died, and 188 remained on the 31st day of December last.

The above number is exclusive of 134 maniac patients, admitted into the Bloomingdale Asylum; and together with those that remained there on the 31st December, 1827, amount to 219 lunatic patients, who have received the benefit of the asylum, during the year 1828.

Of those patients, 59 have been discharged cured, 8 as being much improved, 21 as being improved, 28 discharged at the request of their friends, though not improved, 13 have died, 1 has eloped, and 89 remained on the 31st day of December last.

The amount of expenditures (exclusive of the Bloomingdale asylum) for the year 1828, has been $24,026.54. The $12,500 allowed by the state, the sums received from the United States for the care of sick and disabled seamen, from pay patients, and from other sources, amounted to $29,160.97, leaving a balance in favor of the hospital of $5,134.43.

The expenditures for the support of the Bloomingdale asylum during the last year, have been $17,475.86; the amount received and due for board during the same period, is $18,114.59, leaving a balance of $638.73, in favor of the asylum; and which balance being deducted from the balance against the asylum on the 31st December 1827, amounting to $4,391.79, leave a balance against the asylum of $3,753.06, not including the out-standing debts for board still to be collected.

The debt incurred for the asylum amounting to $141,227.85, has not been reduced during the last year, but the sinking fund formed for the purpose of reducing it, has been increased to $19,173.42.

The institution unremittingly proves to be a great public blessing, by the relief it affords to much individual sickness and painful suffering. It is a charitable foundation of indispensible and eminent utility, and has unshaken claims to the continued and liberal patronage of the state.

Ordered, That the said communication be laid upon the table, and that the usual number of copies thereof be printed for the use of the legislature.

Mr. Brown gave notice that he would, on some future day, ask leave to introduce a bill, to authorise the sale of the town poor-house and farm of the town of Mount-Pleasant in the county of Westchester.

On motion of Mr. Edgerton,

Resolved, That the committee on expiring laws be directed to inquire into the expediency of repealing all laws authorising the sale of lottery tickets; and to ascertain (if practicable) what sums are due to the institutions, or their agents, for whose benefit such lotteries were granted; and to report their opinions upon the expediency of making provision for the payment of such sums as may be due to said institutions, or their agents, out of the treasury of this state.

On motion of Mr. Johnson,

Resolved, That the canal commissioners be, and they are hereby requested to report to this house, how great a reduction is necessary to bring the waters of the Seneca lake at their natural level, to a level with the outlet, or the body of water between the lake and the reef at Waterloo; whether such reduction can be made, without endangering a full supply of water for the navigation of the Cayuga and Seneca canal; if so reduced, will it be necessary to deepen any part of the canal already constructed; if necessary, to what depth beyond the present bottom; and what will be the probable expense of such deepening, and of the excavation necessary to be made for the purpose of reducing the waters of the lake to such level; and what effect would it have upon the navigation, during the approaching season; and what effect it would have upon the hydraulic privileges at Waterloo.

Ordered, That the committee on canals and internal improvements be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of sundry persons residing at and near the head of the Seneca lake, praying for the passage of a law directing the canal commissioners to reduce the waters of said lake to a level with its outlet, and that the said petition be referred to the canal commissioners.

Ordered, That the usual number of copies of the report of the committee on privileges and elections, to which was recommitted their report and resolutions on the petition of Harvey Granger, together with the petition of the inspectors of elections of the town of Greenfield in the county of Saratoga, and the documents accompanying the same, be printed for the use of the legislature.

ISRAEL SLOAN, Jun.

Dated at Pompey, this 26th day of January, 1829.

Ordered, That the said report be laid upon the table.

A communication from the canal commissioners was read, in the words following, to wit:

The canal commissioners, in obedience to the resolution of the Honorable Assembly of the 21st ultimo, referring to them the petition of the inhabitants of the town of Utica, praying for the reduction of the waters of the Oneida lake, and for other purposes; and requesting their "opinion of the practicability and feasibility of lowering said lake by cutting down the outlet thereof, and the making said outlet or river navigable, as set forth in said petition, with their opinion of the probable expense; and that they report their views of the effect of this improvement on the canal revenues, and as to giving increased value to lands adjoining said lake;" report:

That in reference to the question of the practicability of lowering the lake, and of improving the navigation of its outlet, it is proper to remark, that the surveys and examinations which the commissioners were authorised to make by an act of the last legislature, with a view of the accomplishment of their objects, have not been performed. Several appointments for this purpose were made by one of the commissioners during the summer; but the intervention of flood, and the continuance of high water, rendered it necessary to postpone this service to a more favorable season. The commissioners are therefore destitute of information derived from their personal observation, or from the surveys of any engineer acting under their authority: And the only information which they have on the subject, which can be deemed official, is from the report of James Geddes, esquire, to the surveyor-general, in 1809, which will be found in the first volume of Canal documents, at page 14; who very briefly remarks, that "the rapid at the west end of the Oneida lake falls not quite 18 inches, and there is something over a foot more fall to the Caughanoy reef, making only 30 inches, that the Oneida lake can be lowered very easily." To this extent, it would seem Mr. Geddes supposed the lake could be lowered without much expense; and we should infer from his language, that it is practicable to lower it still more, but not without considerable cost and difficulty. From the same report, we learn that the fall from the lake to Three-river point, where the outlet connects with the Oswego river, is twelve and a half feet. After cutting down the reef near the lake, the erection of one or two dams, and the same number of locks, would, we apprehend, accomplish the objeet of the petitioners. But without some information as to the extent and character of the excavation required in the bed of the outlet, and of the places most suitable for the location of the dams and locks, we are unable to estimate their probable cost.

The commissioners do not apprehend that the effect of the improvement would be injurious to the canal revenue, unless it should occasion a diversion of business from that part of the Erie canal lying parallel with the Oneida lake, and from the navigation above Three-river point on the Oswego canal. From Three-river point, it would be practicable for loaded boats to pass up the outlet, and through the Oneida lake, to the mouth of Oneida creek, and within three or four miles of the Erie canal. The distance on this route would be 18 miles through the outlet, 20 across the lake, and 4 to the Erie canal, making the whole distance 42 miles. If a canal were to be constructed between the lake and the Erie canal, it would require a lockage of 54 feet. The distance from Three-river point, on the present navigation, by the way of Salina, to the place where the lake route would intersect it, would be about 50 miles, with an amount of lockage precisely the same as that on the other route. This route, although eight miles the longest, would have the advantage of an uninterrupted towing path, and a safe navigation in all weather; and boats would generally prefer this route, on account of the freight and passengers which they would obtain at the many important villages and landing places which are situated upon it. On the lake route, steam-boats must be exchanged for horse power, to tow the canal boats between Three-river point and the easterly side of Oneida lake, during boisterous weather; and in heavy swells, boats could not be towed in safety, and would be subjected to frequent and injurious detention. And were a connection made between the Erie canal and the lake, as well as the improvement in the outlet now asked for by the petitioners, we are inclined to believe that less business would be diverted from the present navigation, than would be created and brought upon it, by opening a navigable communication with the extensive country lying around the Oneida lake, and along the shores of its outlet, by reclaiming its low lands, and rendering habitable and healthful extensive tracts now uncultivated.

Judging from the beneficial effects which have resulted from the lowering of the Onondaga lake, the canal commissioners are of opinion that the lands adjoining these waters would be enhanced in value, and the health of the surrounding country would be greatly promoted, by permitting the petitioners to reduce the surface of the lake, in the manner and under the restrictions set forth in their petition.

SAMUEL YOUNG,
HENRY SEYMOUR,
WILLIAM C. BOUCK.

Albany, February 10, 1829.

Ordered, That the said communication, together with the documents accompanying the same, be referred to a select committee, consisting of Mr. Savage, Mr. Falley and Mr. Mathews.

A message from the Senate, delivered by their clerk, with the bill therein mentioned, was read, informing that they have passed the bill entitled "An act directing the manner of choosing electors of president and vice-president;" in which bill they request the concurrence of this house.

The said bill was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and referred to a select committee, consisting of Mr. Skinner, Mr. T. L. Smith and Mr. Judd, to consider and report thereon.

Mr. W. Hall, from the committee on engrossed bills, reported, that they have examined the engrossed bill entitled "An act for establishing an additional clerk's office of the supreme court in the village of Canandaigua in the county of Ontario," and find the same correctly engrossed.

The said engrossed bill, entitled "An act for establishing an additional clerk's office of the supreme court in the village of Canandaigua in the county of Ontario," was read the third time.

Resolved, That the bill do pass.

Ordered, That the clerk deliver the said bill to the Senate, and request their concurrence in the same.

Van Beuren, from the said committee, reported progress, and asked for and obtained leave to sit again.

The house then again resolved itself into a committee of the whole, on the resolution relating to the abolition of slavery in the district of Columbia; and after some time spent thereon, Mr. Speaker resumed the chair, and Mr. Burt, from the said committee, reported progress, and asked for and obtained leave to sit again.

Mr. Paige, from the committee on the incorporation and alteration of the charters of banking and insurance companies, reported:

That they have bestowed upon the subjects submitted to them for consideration, their most deliberate attention; subjects which, from the great and engrossing magnitude of the questions they involve, demand at our hands to be considered, in the language of his excellency the governor, "as the important business of the session." No questions, in the opinion of the committee, possess, at the present crisis, so direct and so vital a connection with the best interests of this community, as the questions now agitated in relation to banks. So momentous are these questions, and so tremendous will be the consequences of an erroneous decision of them, that the reflecting and the patriotic portion of our constituents are watching our deliberations with the most anxious solicitude. Hence it will be perceived how great and how fearful must be the responsibility of this legislature, and how imperious must be their duty to discard every interested consideration—to rise superior to every geographical predilection—and to move firmly and independently forward to the discharge of that high and elevated duty which the representative character imposes upon them.

The committee, deeply sensible of the magnitude of the subjects which it became their duty to consider, proceeded to the performance of the task assigned them, with feelings of the greatest distrust. They were aware of the difficulties and embarrassments by which these subjects were encompassed. They were aware of the great sensitiveness which pervaded the minds of many of those who were more directly interested in the questions which the committee were called upon to decide. The committee also conceived that there might perhaps be entertained by the numerous applicants for renewals of existing charters, and for new incorporations, some little jealousy of each other; or at least considerable zeal in behalf of their favorite applications. The committee therefore approached these perplexing questions with great caution, and with feelings of an impartial character, and with single intentions to advance the great interests of the community; relying with implicit confidence upon the liberality and magnanimity of this house, to give credit to the rectitude of their intentions, if they did not accord in all respects with the result of their deliberations.

The committee are convinced that community expect from us at the present session, a final disposition of the vexed questions in relation to banks; and that that community will not acquit us from the charge of a want of patriotism, unless we sacrifice personal preferences and individual views upon the altar of the general weal. The committee were necessarily and unavoidably prevented from sooner presenting their views to the house, in consequence of not being possessed of the details of the plan in relation to banks, which was adverted to in the message of his excellency the governor. That plan has, within a few days past, been submitted to the committee; and they have industriously devoted themselves to its consideratiou, in connection with other subjects embraced within the sphere of their duties.

Inasmuch as there are some few among our constituents, who entertain feelings of hostility to the whole banking system, believing it to be an engine of speculation, it may not be unprofitable concisely to glance at its advantages to commercial communities. Banks have successively been introduced in Italy, Germany, Holland, England, Scotland, France, and the United States: and the experiment in all these countries proves incontestibly that the system of banking renders almost infinite aids to trade and industry, to the administration of the finances of the government, and to the whole system of political economy.

The inconvenience, risk, and danger attending the transmission of coin from one quarter of the world to another, together with its inadequacy to supply the necessities of society, led to the introduction, first, of bills of exchange, and afterwards to a general system of paper credit in the form of promissory notes payable on demand, which is the system of banking; in which form, paper now renders the service which otherwise would be performed by a metallic currency. Gold and silver, however, still remain as a measure of value, and the medium of exchange. They are still the only circulating medium common to all nations. Paper money, as a medium of circulation, acts only as the representative of coin by which its value is regulated. This system of paper credit has now become indispensable to all commercial countries. It is the most powerful agent known to the world, in generating the prosperity and wealth of a nation. In great exigencies, it, by its timely assistance, often delivers governments from embarrassments and danger. It increases the active capital of a country, which extends labour and industry, and therefore creates a greater quantity of the products of both; and by producing more commodities for exportation, accomplishes a favorable balance of trade, and the introduction and increase of gold and silver.

Although the wealth of a nation is not to be measured by the amount of the precious metals it possesses, but by the quantity of the productions of its labor and industry, yet gold and silver deposited in banks become the basis of an extended paper circulation, which, as to all objects of commerce, is a positive increase of capital. Banks, by supplying an adequate circulating medium, place it within the power of the industrious to obtain that portion of the currency of the country which his wants demand, and enable honest and industrious men of small capital to commence and prosecute business to the benefit of themselves and of community. They also have a powerful agency in diminishing the rate of interest; and by supplying the place of the metals, enable government to discharge with them its foreign debts. Banks, in this country, have been productive of the greatest advantages. They, together with the powerful influence of free institutions, have been the great instrument in advancing this republic to its present exalted eminence of wealth and power. They have developed the resources, and called into action the energies, of this enterprising people. Without their invigorating influence upon commerce, agriculture and manufactures, the merchant would not have been able to purchase, nor the farmer to sell, the products of the soil; the goods of the manufacturer would have remained upon his hands; and instead of that wealth, industry and power, which now meets the eye in every department of this republic, we should have beheld nothing but poverty, inertness and distress.

A free government is peculiarly adapted to the prosperous existence of banking institutions. There the hand of tyranny is never stretched out to divert their funds, or to pervert them from the legitimate objects of their establishment. To make these institutions productive of the greatest advantages to a country, they must be established upon liberal principles. They will not flourish under the blighting mildew of tyranny, nor under shackles and restrictions. The security of the public must depend upon the capital paid in, and upon the fair character and integrity of the stockholders.

The great fundamental principle of banking, is the convertibility of paper into coin, at the will of the holder; and upon this depends the whole success of the system of paper credit. The precious metals are the only circulating medium common to all nations. Whatever, in any particular country, is used as a representative of coin, must be capable of being turned into it at the will of the holder, or this representative ceases to be of the value of that which it represents. No solidity of capital, or solvency of a banking institution, can sustain paper at the value of coin, any longer than it pays gold and silver for it on demand. Whenever paper ceases to be convertible into coin at the will of the holder, it immediately suffers a depreciation which always results in the rise of specie, and of all commodities, and an unfavorable balance of trade, together with all the distresses and embarrassments inseparable from such a state of things. These facts show the vital importance of preserving inviolable this fundamental principle of the system of banking, and to guard against every cause which has a tendency to destroy it. Excessive issues of paper by banks, beyond their power of redemption, is the great evil to be apprehended, as most directly interfering with this fundamental principle. The credit of the paper always depends upon the ability of the bank to pay specie for it on demand. Excessive issues of paper, by placing it beyond the power of the bank to redeem it, not only destroy the credit of the paper, but produce a forced and sickly circulation, the derangement of commerce, and the distress and ruin of the citizen.

So deeply convinced are the committee of the vital importance to the welfare of this community, of preventing the excessive issues of paper by banks, to which the desire of profit often tempts them, that the committee recommend an alteration of the existing law, so as to restrain banks from having, at any one time, in circulation, notes to an amount exceeding twice their capital stock paid in.

The committee conceive, from the foregoing remarks, it will be clearly perceived that the principle recently suggested, of investing the capital of a bank in stocks or in bonds and mortgages, cannot with safety be introduced into the banking system of this country; inasmuch as it would not be practicable to convert these securities into coin with that facility which is necessary to a prompt redemption of the paper issued by the bank. And where the capital is so invested, if on sudden emergencies specie was wanted to meet a run upon the bank, it would be found that the conversion of the capital stock into coin could not be accomplished, except at a great sacrifice, which would cripple if it did not wholly destroy the institution. And if it were contemplated, not to make the notes payable in coin in order to establish this principle, it would be nothing else but a repetition of the system of paper emissions, which have always proved disastrous, and are now universally exploded. The solvency of a bank, and the solidity of its paper, is not produced by locking up its capital in such a manner as to render impracticable its convertibility into coin; but by giving the bank the free use of its capital, and by restricting within a safe limit the amount of its issues.

The committee are profoundly impressed with the importance of the present interesting crisis—a crisis, perhaps, more momentous in its character, than any which has occurred since the formation of the national government. The system of banking has become so firmly established, and is so intimately connected with, and so necessary to the vital interests of this community, that it would be disastrous beyond conception to abolish it; and it is even extremely hazardous to alter its principles, for fear we may derange some part of the great commercial machine, which has adapted itself to the existing system. Most of the existing bank charters will expire in one, two, three and four years from this time. It is therefore all important, at this session of the legislature, to make a final disposition of this interesting subject. Such a disposition from us is the universal expectation of community; and we are called upon by every consideration of duty, and the public interest, to quiet the apprehensions of our constituents, by acting promptly upon this great and engrossing question.

At a juncture like the present, as might have been expected, a variety of plans have been proposed, to establish the system of banking upon new principles. It appears to be conceded, that the system itself is not to be abandoned; and the plan of a state bank with branches, for the most obvious reasons, is wholly inadmissible. All experience shows that government or financial banks always abuse the trust confided to them. In pressing emergencies, they never fail to extend the paper emissions beyond the proper limit, to the destruction of their own credit, the ruin of public affairs, and the sacrifice of private property. All the authority of a government cannot impart to mere paper the quality of money. This quality can only be acquired by being based upon commercial credit, and by being convertible into coin at the will of the holder. The only question, therefore, remaining for us to dispose of, is, whether the existing bank charters shall be continued, or shall be left to wind up their concerns, and new incorporations alone to be granted; or whether the present bank charters shall be continued, and also some new banks created, upon such sound principles, and with such wholesome restrictions, as the wisdom of the legislature may devise. The latter alternative appears to be the one called for, by not only public opinion, but also by the public interest.

As to the principles upon which the old charters ought to be renewed, and new incorporations created, the committee believe with his excellency the governor, that "they should refer exclusively to the safety and stability of the institutions." And that "in all our deliberations on this subject, we should keep constantly in view the important consideration, that the solvency of the banks, and the consequent stability of their paper, is the principal and almost the only point in which the public has much interest."

The great effort heretofore, has been to impose such restrictions, (among which the most prominent has been the one of the personal liability of the stockholders,) as will effectually protect community from losses by the failure of banks. These restrictions have been objected to, upon the ground that they would defeat the very object had in view—that of the security of community; that they would have the certain effect to drive men of capital and integrity from the banks, and would throw the stock into the hands of irresponsible men and of speculators, who would be not only destitute of property, but of character; and that the creditor of the institution would be defrauded of his entire debt.

The great importance of devising some plan, and of digesting some system which would furnish to community an ample security against losses from the failure of banks, prompted the committee to bestow an attentive consideration upon the plan to accomplish this object, alluded to in the message of his excellency the governor. And the committee flatter themselves that something can be formed out of it, which will effectually indemnify the bill-holder from every possible loss that can in any event be sustained by the insolvency of banks. If the committee are correct in their opinion on this subject, the contest about restrictions, heretofore waged so warmly both in and out of this house, will be forever at rest. The existing laws, (18th chap. 1st part of Revised Statutes,) although they contain many valuable and inestimable provisions, which correct most of the abuses which have hitherto existed in the management of banks, and which undoubtedly will prevent many of those flagrant frauds which have sometimes been perpetrated upon the stockholders and creditors of these institutions; yet these laws do not afford to the creditors of the bank such a certain and perfect security from losses, as is placed beyond all contingency.

The 18th chapter of the first part of the Revised Statutes, provides many highly salutary restrictions upon monied corporations. They, among other provisions, require all the capital stock to be actually paid in. They interdict a reduction of the capital, and its being withdrawn by the stockholders. They prohibit loans being made to the directors, beyond a specified amount. They render void all conveyances and assignments of the real estate and effects of the corporation, not authorised by the board of directors, and also all conveyances and payments by corporations when insolvent, or in contemplation of insolvency; and every director who violates any of these provisions, is subject to fine and imprisonment, and is rendered personally liable to the creditors and stockholders to the full extent of the loss sustained by such violation. And in every case of fraudulent insolvency, the directors by whose acts it was occasioned, are also rendered personally liable; and after the property of the directors and the effects of the corporation are exhausted, the stockholders are made responsible for the deficiency. Gross negligence in the management of the business of the corporation, is declared fraudulent; and the directors and stockholders are required to repel, by proof, the presumption of fraud.

It will be seen that these provisions, although they furnish valuable safeguards to the public against the failure of banks; yet, while on the one hand they do not provide a security perfect in its nature, not extending to the case of an innocent insolvency; on the other hand, the banks complain of the provision rendering the stockholders personally liable for an insolvency, caused by the misconduct of the directors; and also of the provision requiring the directors and stockholders to repel, by proof, the presumption of fraud, which the law infers from mere negligence in the administration of the affairs of the company.

These two last mentioned provisions are objected to, as injurious to the prosperity and solvency of the banking institutions, having a tendency to drive men of capital and integrity from not only the direction, but altogether from the institutions. And inasmuch as the bill the committee intend to ask leave to introduce, creates a perfect security to community, these provisions in the existing law, so strenuously objected to, will become unnecessary. The committee therefore recommend their repeal.

It will be perceived, then, that by the existing laws, the creditors had not any certain security against losses from the failure of banks; and that the security proposed, that of the personal liability of the stockholders, was one which was apprehended would prove wholly ineffectual, if not disastrous to community. It was, therefore, an object of great desire, to digest some plan, which, while it avoided the objections urged against the principle of personal liability, would accomplish the complete indemnity of the bill-holder from all losses from the failure of any monied corporation. The attainment of such an object, would satisfy the demands of community, and would gratify the ardent wishes of patriotism.

The loss by the insolvency of banks, generally falls upon the farmer, the mechanic and the laborer, who are least acquainted with the condition of banks, and who, of all others, are most illy able either to guard against or to sustain a loss by their failure. The protection and security of this valuable portion of our population, demands from us, in their favor, our most untiring exertions; and our time and talents cannot be more beneficially employed, than when we are legislating for their indemnity.

The committee, therefore, under the hope of accomplishing an end so much to be desired, as that of securing the community against all losses from monied corporations, bestowed their undivided and deliberate attention upon the plan proposed, of making all the banks responsible for each other to community, with the expectation that it might be so modified and framed as to create a perfect and never-failing security to the creditors of these institutions, against every possible loss; and also to be presented in a shape which would not be so vitally objectionable to the banks, as to prevent their acceptance of charters under it.

The committee flatter themselves that they have settled upon the details of a bill which will accomplish these objects: And if it should meet with the approbation of this legislature, they are convinced, from their reflections and deliberations on the subject, that it will be attended by the most propitious results. It will not only possess the invaluable recommendation of creating a complete and infallible security to the creditors of monied corporations against all losses, but it will impart to the bank paper of this state a solidity and a currency equal, if not superior, to any in the world. It will entirely expel from circulation, within our limits, all paper of a questionable character. It will prevent runs upon banks, and also all combinations between several institutions to destroy any particular bank, since it will become the common interest of all to sustain and uphold each other.

The committee are aware, that by compelling the banks to become responsible for each other, they impose an extremely severe condition upon these valuable institutions, a condition perhaps more rigorous than justice would dictate. And the committee are so deeply impressed with this truth, that they conceive it their imperious duty to recommend the repeal of the law which now imposes a specific tax upon these banks, as an inducement to them, and a just though inadequate equivalent for the increased risk and responsibility about to be imposed upon them. And the committee believe that this recommendation of theirs will have its due weight, when it is understood that they propose to subject the stockholders to taxation for all their stock in common with their other property; and when it is also understood that the tax now assessed upon banks passes exclusively into the treasury of the county where they are located, and no benefit from it whatever is derived by any county in the state in which there happens to be no such institution; whereas if the stockholders were taxed as formerly, the benefit of the tax would be received by every county in which the stockholders happened to reside.

The committee, in the bill they intend to present to the house, have incorporated two principles; the one to compel the banks to raise a fund, to be paid into the treasury of the state, there to remain, to be inviolably appropriated to satisfy any losses that may arise from the failure of any particular bank or banks; the whole interest of this fund to belong to the common school fund, after deducting thereout the salaries of the commissioners, for whose appointment the proposed law provides, and the expenses of executing the duties of their office.

The other principle incorporated in the bill, is the creation of three commissioners, with powers restricted to that of simply inspecting the condition of the banks; and in case of the insolvency of any one or more of them, to apply to the chancellor under the existing laws, in like manner as the attorney-general or a creditor is now authorised to do, for an injunction, and the appointment of a receiver, and also to distribute the effects of the company among its fair and honest creditors.

The appointment of commissioners to inspect the banks, is not a new principle. It was contained, although in a different form, in the charter of the old Bank of North America, and also in the charter of the old Bank of the United States. In the charter of the present Bank of the United States, the right is expressly given to the secretary of the treasury, to inspect the books of the bank whenever he thinks proper; and the bank is required to furnish him with weekly statements of its affairs; and it is lawful for a committee of either house of congress, appointed for the purpose, at all times to inspect the affairs of the bank, and to report to congress; and if the committee find or believe that the charter of the bank has been violated, it is lawful for congress to direct legal proceedings to be instituted to obtain an annulment of the charter. In Vermont, also, the legislature have the power annually to send a committee to examine all the banks in the state, and to report the condition of the same; and this committee are required, in case any bank has violated its charter, to direct the state's attorney of some county to take the necessary steps to obtain a dissolution of the corporation. The same principle of inspection has been adopted in Virginia, Rhode-Island, South-Carolina, and several other states; and there appear to be sound reasons for this right of inspection of banks on the part of the government. They are permitted to create a circulating medium for the country, which is allowed to be a substitute for specie. It therefore is a national concern, and common prudence would seem to require that the government should have the power and right of ascertaining if this high trust was properly executed. And it would seem, that the possession and exercise of this right of inspection by the government ought to be desired by the stockholders, as it would give the public an additional confidence in their paper, and would dispel that mysticism which now envelopes all the operations of a bank, and which excites the jealousy and suspicion of community; and no bank could object to such an inspection, without being obnoxious to the suspicion that some mismanagement of the affairs of the institution was intended.

There is no cause for apprehension that there would be any combination, between a part of the banks, to destroy any particular institution, as they all will possess a common interest to uphold each other, and to prevent the insolvency of any one of their number. And there does not appear to be any ground for the objection, that these commissioners will have a power, which, if they should be wickedly inclined, could be wielded to crush any particular institution; for the power proposed to be given to them, is merely that of inspection, and nothing more. If they should discover any cause for interference, then they are authorised to apply to the chancellor for an injunction, under the existing law. If the chancellor, upon investigation, should believe the corporation proceeded against was solvent, and had not violated its charter, he would dissolve the injunction, and permit the company to resume its operations; and the only inconvenience sustained, would be a temporary suspension of its business. Its credit would not be shaken, as all the other banks would be the guarantees of its paper. And it is apparent it would be for the interest of the banks themselves to have this commission created, as there then would be a set of men whose express duty it was vigilantly to guard against the insolvency of any one or all of the institutions, and to prevent any great amount of losses from a failure.

The committee having settled upon the details of a general law, to provide an adequate security to community, next proceeded to consider the subject of renewals of the present bank charters, and of new incorporations. And while the committee were unanimous in the opinion, that the existing banking capital of this state was inadequate to supply a circulating medium sufficient for all the beneficial purposes of community; and while they were convinced that the increased business, the accumulated wealth, and the extended commercial prosperity of the state, required considerable additions of banking facilities, to satisfy all the wants of our internal trade, and of the various departments of industry; and while the committee were sensible of the mighty strides which the western part of this state had taken, in wealth, industry and commerce, and of the deficiency of banking capital to meet the demands of the rich, enterprising, and intelligent population of that prosperous region; and while they were satisfied as to the merit of many applications for additional banking capital, from other parts of the state; and while the committee intend to bestow an immediate consideration upon the various applications before them: yet the committee are impelled by an imperious sense of duty, to express to this house their deep conviction that the great and paramount question, the one in which the great mass of this community are most deeply interested, is that of the renewal of the charters of the present sound and solvent banks.

The committee believe that every person who reflects upon this question, must be profoundly impressed with its engrossing magnitude. To refuse to renew the present bank charters, and to compel the banks to call in their debts, amounting to nearly 30 millions of dollars, would usher in upon this community a train of calamities, which would blast the hopes and wreck the fortunes of the most prosperous of our commercial citizens. It would plunge the whole state in distress and ruin. None but those of great wealth would survive the tremendous convulsion which would shake this community to its deepest centre. The poor, and those of small capital who were rapidly improving their condition, would be absolutely crushed. The disastrous consequences would reach to the remotest extremes of society. It would not only be felt by the merchant and manufacturer, but would extend to the farmer, the mechanic and the laborer. The sacrifice of property and absolute bankruptcy, would be the certain offspring of the pressure of the times. By the sudden and violent diminution of the circulating medium, a general stagnation of business would follow. Industry would cease to be productive. The goods of the manufacturer would remain unsold. The farmer would have no market for his produce, as there would be none or but few persons able to purchase. And the deficiency of the circulating medium produced by withdrawing the notes of the present banks from circulation, could not be supplied by the paper of new incorporations; for it has been demonstrated in the able report of the bank committee of the other branch of this legislature, that the time required to close up the affairs of the old banking institutions, would prevent the investment of the capital of those institutions in the new incorporations; and that the small profits now received from bank stock, would deter monied men from making a similar investment of their capital, and particularly since there would be a contingency as to the permanency of the investment.

The committee are deeply impressed with the truth, that in our legislation on this subject, we ought to have no reference as to what persons are to become owners of the stock in banks. The mass of our citizens are alone interested in having a sound and safe circulating medium. As to who shall derive a profit in creating this medium, they are entirely indifferent. This is a minor question, which is merged in the greater question of the general welfare. The community have a deep and vital interest in the continuance of the present sound and solvent banks. Men of capital, integrity and experience, have at present the control and management of these institutions. Their prudent, safe and successful operations hitherto, furnish to the public a pledge, that these institutions will continue to be sound and solvent, and productive of great advantages to community. Every consideration, therefore, connected with sound policy and the public good, dictate to us the duty of uniting our exertions to effect a renewal of the charters of the present sound and solvent banks.

But in so strongly recommending the re-chartering of the present sound and solvent banking institutions, the committee do not wish to be understood as detracting from the merit, or to shake a belief in the necessity of new incorporations. This state has increased in wealth, resources and business, to such an extent, that additional banking capital is almost indispensable to her prosperity and future advancement. Her internal improvements, the genius, industry and enterprise of her population, have propelled her, with a celerity unexampled, to her present proud pre-emience of power and prosperity. Her rapid advancement is the result of the fostering spirit of her free institutions, and her local advantages, aided in no small degree by her banking institutions. The committee, therefore, with great unanimity, recommend not only the re-chartering of the present sound and solvent banks, but also the establishment of some new banks, to be judiciously located in those parts of the state where the business and commerce will warrant it.

There is, however, in the opinion of the committee, a limit which ought not to be transcended; for they conceive that an excess is perhaps equally injurious with a deficiency of banking capital. That the former has a direct tendency not only to produce a superabundant circulation, which leads to a depreciation of the currency and the rise of commodities, but also by the excessive facilities it affords in obtaining money accommodations, to encourage speculation and habits of extravagance, and to furnish temptations to over-trading, which invariably eventuates in the ruin of individuals, and the general stagnation of industry.

The committee entertain not the least doubt, that the intelligence, the discrimination, and the sound judgment of this house, will enable them to ascertain the proper limit to which the banking capital in this state ought to be increased; and that their ample knowledge, as well as their pure integrity, will direct them to not only correct conclusions, but also to correct legislation on this subject.

The committee feel the most perfect confidence, that notwithstanding the multiplicity of bank applications pending before this legislature, this house will exhibit, during the present session, the greatest firmness, independence and discrimination. That no matter how great may be the external influence exerted to prevent the dispassionate consideration of each separate application upon its individual merits, that it will only furnish to this house the opportunity to illustrate, in an eminent degree, their inflexible integrity and their fearless independence.

The committee believe, that on the all-important subject in relation to banks, there will be a demand for the exercise of all our patriotism. And unless there are some mutual concessions and mutual forbearance on this vital question, the public good will be sacrificed to individual jealousies and personal collisions. Such an event would be a subject of the deepest regret to this whole community, and would be discreditable to the high character of this house. The committee anticipate a more auspicious result, from the enlightened views and patriotic intentions of the members of the present legislature. The committee believe that the intelligence of this house will lead them to look to the whole surface of things—to take an enlarged view of the great interests of the state; and while they faithfully support all local measures of acknowledged merit, they will contribute all their energies to sustain and advance the prosperity of the whole community. No crisis more than the present, ever called for the exercise of the virtues, or furnished a more propitious opportunity to gather the honors of the representative character.

We are now about to come in contact with the great monied interests of the state. If we discard every interested consideration; if we resist every undue effort to bias our feelings, or to sway our judgments; and if we inflexibly act with single reference to the public good, we shall secure the confidence of a just and discerning people, and we shall possess, what is above all price, the enduring consolation of an approving conscience.

The committee have directed their chairman to ask leave to introduce the bill they have prepared, as above stated.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Paige, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to create a fund for the benefit of the creditors of certain monied corporations, and for other purposes;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Ordered, That three times the usual number of copies of the said bill and report be printed in pamphlet form, for the use of the legislature.

Mr. Taber, from the committee on the establishment and improvement of roads and bridges, and the incorporation of turnpike companies, on the petition of sundry inhabitants of the county of Lewis, praying for the passage of an act appointing commissioners to lay out a road in the town of Denmark in said county, asked leave to report by bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Taber, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act appointing commissioners to lay out a public highway in the town of Denmark in the county of Lewis;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Mann, from the committee on claims, to which was referred the petition of John H. Lathrop and Orin Palmer, of the town of Salina in the county of Onondaga, praying for a certain amendment to the act entitled "An act to authorise the sale of certain lands therein mentioned by the people of this state," passed March 10th, 1827, and the report of the surveyor-general on the said petition, asked for leave to report by bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Mann, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to authorise the sale of certain lands therein mentioned by the people of this state,' passed March 10th, 1827;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Mann, from the committee on claims, to which was referred the petition of John Servoss, one of the heirs of Christopher Servoss, formerly of Charlott river, in the county of Tryon, (now Schoharie,) praying compensation for certain personal estate, alledged to have been seized and sold by the people of this state, as forfeited by the conviction and attainder of the said Christopher Servoss, for high treason during the revolutionary war, reported:

That the committee have examined into the origin and nature of the petitioner's claim, and it appears that the petitioner's father was, in his life time, seized of a considerable real and personal estate, and that he was shot at his own door during the revolutionary war; that after his death, he was indicted, committed and attainted of high treason, and his real estate at least was forfeited and sold. Most of his descendants, except the petitioner, fled to Canada, and have remained there ever since. This conviction being subsequent to the death of the accused, has recently been adjudicated to be void, and the state have been obliged, in good faith, to render an equivalent for the lands thus sold, in order to quiet the purchaser.

It is represented in a remonstrance presented last year, against this claim, signed by several aged men, who say they were acquainted with the facts, that the heirs of Christopher Servoss obtained from the British king a full indemnity for the lands and personal property lost by their father.

They have now recovered back their real estate from the people of this state, and ask to be paid for their personal property over again.

This would appear, (if such are the facts,) to be rather a strong speculation out of the two governments, on the death of their father.

It has been alleged that the ancestor of the petitioner was not attached to the common enemies of British Tories and Indians, which then infested the Mohawk country; and several affidavits, of negative character, are now produced to satisfy us on this point; but the fact that he was convicted at that time, goes far to establish the converse; and this, connected with the history of his death, by the hands of his own countrymen in arms, would induce a strong presumption in favor of such a conclusion.

There is no satisfactory evidence that the personal estate was sold by order of the government, or of its quantity or value.

The committee have directed their chairman to submit the following resolution for the consideration of the house:

Resolved, That the prayer of the petitioner ought not to be granted, and that he have leave to withdraw his petition.

Mr. Speaker put the question whether the house would agree to the said resolution, and it was determined in the affirmative.

Mr. Mann, from the select committee to which was referred the engrossed bill from the Senate, entitled "An act to erect a new town by the name of Little-Falls, from parts of the towns of Herkimer, Fairfield and Germanflatts, in the county of Herkimer," reported, that the committee have examined the said bill, and prepared certain amendments thereto, with which they see no reason why the same should not be passed into a law.

Thereupon,

The amendments were agreed to by the house, ordered to be engrossed, and the bill ordered a third reading.

Mr. Matthews, from the select committee to which was referred the petition of John C. Brown and Truman Adams, executors of the last will and testament of Jonas C. Baldwin deceased, reported:

That on the 17th of May 1817, the said Jonas C. Baldwin purchased of Isaac Wood, one equal undivided half of lot number 67 in the township of Lysander and county of Onondaga: That in good faith, said Baldwin took possession of said land, erected buildings, and made sundry improvements to a considerable amount; and continued in the possession thereof by his tenant, until ejected by the people of the state of New-York: That the declaration in ejectment was handed by said tenant to said Jonas C. Baldwin, and by him to Isaac Wood, of whom he purchased, with a request that the said Wood would defend the same; and that it was not known to the said Baldwin but that said Wood was defending the same, until the sheriff came with a writ of possession issued on the judgment in said suit, and took possession of the land.

The committee therefore are of opinion, from the facts set forth in the petition, that the said Jonas C. Baldwin, in his lifetime, supposed that the said Wood had taken measures within the time required by law to recover said land, under the statute of this state, passed April 13th, 1819.

The committee believe, from the above circumstances, that justice and equity require that the petitioners should have the privilege of proving their claim to the commissioners of the land-office, and have directed their chairman to ask leave to introduce a bill for that purpose.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Matthews, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act for the relief of the heirs of Jonas C. Baldwin deceased;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

A message from the Senate, delivered by their clerk, with the bill therein mentioned, was read, informing that they have passed the bill entitled "An act to authorise the supervisors of the county of Monroe to sell the court-house and lot for the purposes therein mentioned, also to amend the act entitled 'An act to authorise the supervisors of the county of Monroe to build a gaol,' passed April 21st, 1828," with the amendments therewith delivered, one of the said amendments being to strike out of the title all after the word "mentioned."

The said bill and amendments were read; and the amendments having been again read, were severally concurred in by the house, and the bill amended accordingly.

Ordered, That the clerk deliver the said bill and amendments to the Senate, and inform them that this house have concurred with them in their amendments to the said bill, and have amended the same accordingly.

The Senate returned by their clerk, the bill entitled "An act in addition to an act providing for the publication of a map and atlas of this state."

Ordered, That the clerk deliver the said bill to the Governor.

A message from the Senate, delivered by their clerk, was read, informing that they have concurred with this house in its resolution of yesterday, appointing Saturday the 14th instant, to proceed to the choice of a secretary of state, treasurer, surveyor-general, commissary-general, and one regent of the university.

The annual report of Epaphras Warren, an inspector of beef and pork, of the county of Tompkins, was read in the words following, to wit:—

TO THE HONORABLE THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF NEW-YORK.

I, Epaphras Warren, inspector of beef and pork for the county of Tompkins, residing in the village of Ithaca, do report, that during the year ending on the first day of January, instant, I have inspected eighty-one barrels of mess pork, two hundred and fourteen barrels prime pork, and forty-five barrels cargo pork. About half the above mentioned pork was still fatted; the other half fatted on corn, and was generally of good quality. The average value was twelve dollars for mess, nine for prime, and seven for cargo, per barrel. The amount of fees derived from my office during the year, was eighty-two dollars;

All of which is respectfully submitted.

EPAPHRAS WARREN.

Ithaca, January 31, 1829.

Ordered, That the same be laid upon the table.

A communication from the canal board was read in the words following, to wit:—

The canal board, on the reference from the Assembly of the petition of Daniel McInroy, reported:

That in pursuance of the provision of an act passed March 29, 1827, entitled "An act for the relief of Daniel McInroy," the canal board, on the application of the petitioner, appointed the 9th day of April, 1827, to inquire into any mistakes which might have existed in the measurement of a certain section of the Champlain canal, constructed by said McInroy, in 1818, and known as section A. On the hearing of the case, the acting canal commissioner on the Northern canal, and one of the engineers who was engaged on that line of the canal embracing the petitioner's contract, were examined as witnesses. It appeared from the testimony of the engineer, Mr. Jerome, that at one end of the section excavated by the petitioner, the surface was covered with a loose mould, which becoming very dry, was burnt off for a considerable depth; and in making the estimate which formed the basis of the settlement with McInroy, the excavation was calculated from the surface after the burning, and not from the natural surface of the earth, as it was when the contract was made.

A majority of the canal board were of the opinion, that the petitioner was entitled to have the excavation estimated from the surface of the ground in the state in which it was when the contract was entered into, and made an allowance to the petitioner, estimating the number of cubic yards burned off, according to his contract price, and interest on the same from the time of completing the contract until April, 1827, amounting in all to $312.

The following extract from the minutes, shows the disposition made of the petitioner's claim by the canal board, under the act before referred to:

"The canal board having heard Daniel McInroy, on his application for an allowance on his contract, for the construction of section A of the Champlain canal, and examined witnesses in relation thereto, pursuant to the provisions of the act chap. 115 of 1827:

Resolved, That there be allowed to the said Daniel McInroy, the sum of three hundred and twelve dollars, and that the comptroller pay the same to him, agreeably to the act chap. 115 of 1827."

The petitioner claimed a further allowance under the law, alledging that the engineer made an erroneous estimate of the number of cubic yards of excavation on section A. The engineer, however, testified to the correctness of the estimate, and the petitioner was unable to get any witnesses to substantiate his claim, by invalidating the accuracy of the engineer's statement, his material witness being, as he alledged, out of the state; but he did not ask a postponement of the case, to procure this witness; and it will be borne in mind, that the day for the hearing was fixed on the application of the petitioner, and a day giving him more time would readily have been agreed to, if he had represented that further time was necessary to enable him to procure his witnesses.

At a subsequent meeting of the board, the petitioner appeared with the witness by whom, as he alledged, the error in the estimates of section A could be established. At this time, the acting commissioner on the Northern canal was not present, and the board declined going into the examination of his case for that reason. At a meeting of the board in Sept. 1828, the petitioner appeared, to ask if the board would give him a re-hearing, and time to procure his witness. It was then decided, that as the case had been heard and determined, and as the petitioner had accepted the award made by the canal board, that no further proceedings could be had under the act of March 29, 1827.

For a further history of this case, reference may be had to the report of the canal committee of the Senate, of 1827, p. 195; and to the report of the canal commissioners, Senate journals of the same year, p. 381.

The petition of sundry inhabitants of the west part of the town of Durham in the county of Greene, and the south part of the town of Broome in the county of Schoharie, praying for the erection of a new town from parts of the said towns; and the remonstrance of sundry inhabitants of the county of Schoharie, against a division of the town of Broome; were severally read, and referred to the committee on the erection and division of towns and counties.

The petition of Charles Baker, of Sandy-Hill in the county of Washington, praying to be remunerated for damages sustained by him, occasioned by a breach in the Champlain canal, was read, and referred to the committee on claims.

The petition of William Brayton and others, praying for the passage of a law directing the re-appraisal of damages sustained by the construction of the Champlain canal, was read, and referred to the canal appraisers.

The petition of sundry inhabitants of the town of Verona in the county of Oneida, relative to lowering the waters of the Oneida lake, was read, and referred to the select committee on that subject, of which Mr. Savage is chairman.

The petition of sundry inhabitants of the county of St. Lawrence, praying permission to erect a toll-bridge across the Oswegatchie river, was read, and referred to the committee on the establishment and improvement of roads and bridges, and the incorporation of turnpike companies.

The memorial of sundry inhabitants of the counties of Steuben, Tompkins and Tioga, praying for the incorporation of a company to construct a rail-road from the head of the Seneca lake to the village of Elmira, was read, and referred to the committee on the establishment and improvement of roads and bridges, and the incorporation of turnpike companies.

Mr. Bradish, from the committee on public lands, to which was referred the the petition of Ezra Goodell and others, occupants of subdivision No. 6, in the Mine reservation in the town of Spring Port, in the county of Cayuga, praying the passage of an act authorising the commissioners of the land-office to grant to them letters patent for the lands so occupied by them respectively, at the price fixed by the appraisement thereof, in 1819, reported:

That on the 26th March, 1819, an act was passed, authorising the surveyor-general "to appoint two proper disinterested persons to appraise and make a true valuation, exclusive of improvements, of the lands" in question. The said act further provided, that whenever such valuation and appraisement should be made and returned, as directed therein, it should be lawful for the commissioners of the land-office, and they were thereby required, if they should approve of such valuation, to grant letters patent to such of the occupants on the said Mine reservation, for the several lots of land therein occupied by them respectively, upon their paying one-fourth part of such valuation or appraisement by the first day of January then next, (that is 1820,) and securing the remainder thereof by bonds and mortgages to the people of this state, to be paid in four equal payments, in each successive year thereafter, with interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum: provided, that such patents should be issued on or before the first day of January then next, (that is 1820); and that the expenses of such appraisement should be averaged among the purchasers, and added to the price or valuation of the said lots respectively."

It appears that in pursuance of the above mentioned act, an appraisement or valuation of the lands in question was made, under the the direction of the surveyor-general, by David Thomas and Humphrey Howland, and a report of such appraisement or valuation was made and filed in the land-office, on the 25th of August, 1819, and approved by the commissioners of the land-office.

By the report of this valuation, it appears that the said subdivision No. 6, contains 185 acres, was appraised at $8 50 per acre, amounting to $1,572 50. The expenses of that valuation were $9 25, making the whole amount of valuation and expenses $1,581 75.

The occupants of the tract at the time of the above appraisement, appear to have been Parley Wheeler, Micajah Wheeler, David Beach, Ezra Goodell, Samuel Weisner, and Anthony Carter. It does not appear that any of these occupants have availed themselves of the provisions of the act of the 26th of March, 1819, herein above mentioned, or complied with its requisitions.

Three of the above named occupants, viz: Parley Wheeler, Ezra Goodell, and Samuel Weisner, together with Daniel Gove, who declares himself now, and so appears to the committee, to be one of the occupants of the lands in question are the present petitioners. They pray that an act may be passed allowing them to become the purchasers of the lands occupied by them respectively, on their paying the prices at which they are valued in the appraisement thereof, made by Messrs. Thomas and Howland, in 1819.

It does not appear that these petitioners have paid any rent to the state for the use of these lands. It would, therefore, seem to the committee unreasonable, that they should be permitted to purchase them at their valuation of 1819, unless upon condition of their paying interest upon that valuation, at the rate fixed in the act above mentioned upon that subject.

At the same time it is stated to the committee, that the valuation of 1819, with interest thereon, at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, to this time, would exceed the present value of these lands. The committee have supposed that any such excess would be counterbalanced by the use of the lands which the occupants have enjoyed without rent; and that an act allowing those occupants the right of purchasing the lands occupied by them respectively, at the prices fixed in the valuation thereof, made by Messrs. Thomas and Howland, in 1819, with interest thereon, from the 1st January, 1820, at 6 per cent. per annum, while it would give the said occupants the benefits of their improvements, would secure to the state its rights and interests, as if the act of the 26th of March, 1819, had been carried fully into effect.

The committee have, therefore, prepared a bill embracing those provisions, and now as leave to introduce the same.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Bradish, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act authorising the sale of certain lands in the Mine reservation, in the county of Cayuga;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Savage, from the committee on grievances, to which was referred the petition of Charles Truesdale, reported:

That the petioner, Charles Truesdale, of the town of Hinsdale, in the county of Columbia, was on the twenty-eighth day of July, in the year 1812, summoned by Alexander Smith, jun. then acting and being one of the deputies of the sheriff of the said county, and one Joseph McKown, another deputy, to go with them to the dwelling-house of Daniel Wilkinson, then residing in the town of Taghkanick, in the said county, to aid them in in the execution of a writ of possession, in favor of John Stivers and Maria his wife, against the said Daniel. That the petitioner and several others, to wit: Thomas Truesdale, Gilbert Turner, Thaddeus Were, and Harry Holdridge, went with the said deputies to the dwelling-house of the said Daniel, for the purpose aforesaid; that the said deputies did not execute the said writ from an apprehension, as was then expressed, of great personal danger; that on the return of the party, and when at the distance of about two miles from the residence of the petitioner, riding in company with said Turner, and somewhat in advance of the residue of the party, it being quite dark, he, your petitioner, was fired at by some person secreted in a thicket adjoining the highway, and shot in the left thigh with a number of duck and pigeon shot; that the wound was severe, and in the opinion of the surgeon and neighbors of the petitioner, dangerous; and in consequence of this wound, the petitioner was confined to his bed for many weeks, and still is so materially injured as not to have been able, at any time since, to pursue his wonted occupation as successfully as before the night of the said wound.

The petitioner's reasons, as stated by him, why he did not apply sooner for relief are, that he was induced to withhold an application to the justice and liberality of his country for an indemnity for his suffering and injuries, in the expectation of receiving some portion of the property of an aged and wealthy parent, so as to be able with that and his own personal exertions, to provide for the comfortable support of himself and family. In this expectation, however, he has been disappointed, and he at length feels himself compelled to present his case to the candid consideration of the legislature, that they may grant to him such aid and relief as the circumstances of the case require.

The facts here set forth, the committee believe to be true, as they are substantiated by the affidavits of the petitioner's surgeon, and those that were with him when wounded. A large number of respectable citizens have signed a petition for the said Charles, many of whom are known to the committee.

The committee, from the facts stated, do, in common with the friends and neighbors of the petitioner, feel, at the first impression, that the state, under the existing circumstances of this case, ought to grant relief, as asked. The petitioner, like a good citizen, obeyed the summons and did his duty, in the discharge of which he received this wound, which disabled him from pursuing the usual labor which procured him his bread. He has delayed this application for almost seventeen years, being under the hope that he should be able, at some future day, to obtain a property that would be ample to supply his wants; but having failed in this, he now asks for a share of the bounties of the state.

The committee having viewed this case, and former applications of a similar character, it appears that none of those applications have been granted. The case of Wiley Nichols and Pliny Darbey are closely allied, in point of claims, to this; and knowing the laws of this state amply provide for persons whom misfortune has reduced to indigent circumstances, they are of opinion that the prayer of the petitioner ought not to be granted, and submit the following resolution.

Resolved, That the prayer of the petitioner ought not to be granted, and that he have leave to withdraw his petition.

Ordered, That the said report and resolution be laid upon the table.

A message from the Governor, delivered by his private secretary, was read, in the words following, to wit:

TO THE ASSEMBLY.

GENTLEMEN,

I have this day approved and signed the bill entitled "An act in addition to an act providing for the publication of a map and atlas of this state."

MARTIN VAN BUREN.

Albany, February 14, 1829.

A communication from the commissioners appointed by an act of the legislature of the 21st April 1828, was read, in the words following, to wit:

The commissioners appointed by an act of the legislature of the state of New-York, passed April 21st, 1828, to lay out and open a road from Cedar Point, westward through the towns of Moriah and Newcomb, in the county of Essex, beg leave to report their doings under and in compliance with the directions of the twelfth section of the said act.

The commissioners have done and performed the duties assigned to them by the said section, as well as it lay in their power. In the first place, they have carefully explored the country which lies between the head waters of the Hudson, (where the west line of the county of Essex comes to the Hudson,) and the Black River. opposite the village of Lowville, in the county of Lewis: The commissioners felicitate themselves in thinking that they have succeeded well in their attempt in finding a good route for a road across that extensive forest—the distance being seventy-two miles, fifty-four chains and ninety-five links, on the line of the road.

There being several ridges and a number of lakes and ponds which lay in our way, so on that account we were necessitated to deviate in some places very considerably from the direct course; and by so doing, we were enabled to avoid all steep ascents and descents, by passing over the ridges obliquely; so that in no place on the route does the ascent exceed seven degrees, and but in a very few places does the ascent come up to six degrees. But from three to five degrees of ascent in passing over ridges, is common on this route. We endeavoured to locate the route as near the base of the country as the nature of the ground would admit of.

The commissioners have come to the conclusion that a good road may be constructed at the average price of one dollar per rod; from one end of the route to the other end, the soil is well calculated for the construction of a road, being loam and sand mixed with some gravel. There are no expensive bridges to be built on the route. The one on the Racket river will be the longest of any of them, the river being one chain and thirty-three links across; the place is safe, with a large rock in the centre of the stream for a middle pier for the bridge. Much care has been taken to select safe and cheap places for building the bridges on all the other streams on the route. Deep digging will be necessary on many sideling places. The rocky ground, the stony ground, and the swampy or marshy ground, are exhibited at one view, in a tabular form, and marked C. It was judged that all the rest of the sections were upon an average, with the general standard or fair chance for making the road.

Remarks on the character of the adjacent lands.

The adjacent lands are various in quality, and so they are also as various in value, in an agricultural point of view; but the land which would be deemed almost worthless, by the mere farmer, has often been found to be the most valuable in a manufacturing or commercial point of view: For instance, the iron ore is most generally found on rough worthless looking land; and the strongest attractions, and the best and greatest indications of ore, are found on the roughest land on the whole route. Again, there are extensive tracts of land not far from the route, which a farmer would not take as a gift; but still, the ship-builder, the house-carpenter and the cabinet-maker, or the forge-master, would think such land to be quite valuable: So that the wants of mankind seems to be the standard of the value of things. However, the greatest portion of the adjacent lands are well worth the attention of the agriculturalist. The soil being composed of sand and loam, in various proportion of mixture, in different places, and it is very well adapted to the culture of rye, Indian corn, spring wheat, pease, oats, flax, potatoes and turnips, and all kinds of grasses: Winter wheat will do well only on a small portion of these lands—that is on certain ridges where the soil is mostly loam and rich. Knowing by fair and repeated trials, as we do know, that the land will yield fair crops of either, or of all the enumerated articles mentioned above, we leave it for others to set such value on it as they please: for ourselves, we think it a good country, taking all things into consideration.

The principal timber growing on this land, are beech, soft and hard maple, white and black ash, basswood, yellow birch, spruce and hemlock, with black cherry and some elm; in the swamps, cedar, tamarac, black spruce, and some fir grow. The under wood are thick; white birch and poplars are scarce.—The pine are but seldom met with in any great quantities. There are no mountains on the route; nor in sight of it; but heavy ridges are to be encountered, and some of these ridges are rough in part, and good land in part: Some of them have the best of land on the highest parts of them. The most of these ridges range from northeast to southwest, with some others ranging in different directions.

A goodly portion of the surface of the land is formed into gentle or gradual swells, and the best and greatest part of the farming land is to be found on these swells. There are vallies also between the ridges; some of these are very good, and others are stony or wet. There are also on some of the brooks and streams, tracts of fine bottom land, for meadows, covered with alder, elm, black cherry, and some soft maple. Here are to be found some spruce and hemlock low land or plains, good in part, and stony or wet in part. But the spruce and hemlock are of a superior order. There are some parts of the high lands where the soil is very good; but being too stony for cultivation, and covered over heavily with beech, the rock maple, and the large yellow birch. On this kind of land, too, is the iron ore to be found the plentiest.

The water power, and chances for hydraulic works, are most abundant, and of the highest order. The line of the road passes by three sets of excellent falls, and very commodious places for villages, (see Map,) on the Long lake, and on the river Racket; and also on the Beaver river, which runs in a westerly direction, somewhat parallel with the line of the road; and but a small distance from it, the water power is really immense; the roaring from its huge falls is heard at a distance of eight or ten miles through the woods.

In townships numbers twenty and twenty-two, where the road line passes, about two-thirds of the land is tillable, and most of it is of second quality, being some stony and of an uneven surface, to the Long lake. Thence up along near the lake, the land this way being variable; in some places it is rough, and in other places it is good for farming, with the most delightful prospects to the west end of the lake. But the land on the northerly side of the lake, is much more uniformly good, lying in gentle rolling swells, nearly the whole extent of the lake, being about sixteen miles in length: a heavy ridge ranges nearly parallel with the lake, at some considerable distance to the south of it. Thence up the valley of the Racket, on the northerly side thereof, between a ridge and the river, most of the land is good, but some uneven on the surface, to the upper falls. Thence over roughish land, of second quality, to a lake; thence up along the lake, and marsh at the upper end of it, to the crossing place on the Still brook; the land is stony along this lake, in many places. Thence westerly over rising land, of first and second quality, with some rocky patches on it, to the lake, with two small inlets to it; thence along the easterly and northerly side of this lake; thence over land rising gradually, and mostly of second quality, to the inlet between two lakes, as per map. Thence on land of good quality, to the south side of a small pond in a marsh; thence on land of second quality, with the marsh on the north side of the line, and a ridge to the south of it; thence on land alternately good and bad, by the north side of a small pond; thence over levelish land in part, and small ridges in part, to an high ridge, ranging nearly north and south; found a low valley of very good land passing clear through the ridge, being about a mile and an half in length, to a place where a branch of the former ridge impeded our course; thence kept at the foot of this branch of the ridge, in a southwesterly direction, to the Great lake in township number thirty-nine of Totten & Crossfield's purchase; thence along the shore of this lake, in a northerly direction, to the northeast corner thereof, on good land for a road; the prospect is very fine, the water clear; thence on good levelish land, westerly two miles; thence the land is more ridgy, but the soil is good, to the old Russell road; the last half mile, a ridge lay close to our line, on the north side thereof; thence along the foot of the same ridge, westerly, to the east line of township number forty-two, on variable land of first and second quality; thence on good land one mile; thence on variable land two miles, some of it being wet and some of it stony, the rest being good; thence on land generally levelish, and mostly of first quality, to the west line of Totten & Crossfield's purchase; we passed by some low, smooth, small ridges, the chance for a road being good; thence on westerly, through township number five of Brown's tract, on land of first and second quality, with some swampy land and stony places; but generally the land is good, with some small ridges on it; thence passing on westerly near the line dividing townships number three and four of Brown's tract, in a devious manner, being prevented from following the direct course, by many small ridges lying in our way; the most of the land in these two townships, adjacent to the road line, is settleable land, and some parcels of it are very good, to a small new settlement near the southwest corner of township number four; from thence in a westerly direction, we passed over the lands of James Watson, being generally good and inviting to the farmer; thence passing on westerly over the lands of Mr. Le Ray, to the Black river; this land is also good, rising and falling very gently, being mostly well timbered; it will reward the labor of the agriculturist abundantly, in the production of grain and clover; it lies in the state of nature, almost to the Black river, on the route of the road.

The line of the road passes only through two townships of the states' land, viz. numbers thirty-nine and forty-two; but it passes within a few miles of four other townships of the states' land, lying and being north of the road line.—Township number six, and the Moose river tract lie some farther from the road line towards the south. All these lands of the state have been appraised some years since, and an age, or ages, will pass by before these lands can be sold, unless a road shall be opened to their vicinity. And in case the opening of such a road is left to the management of two sets of poor settlers, the one set commencing its operations at the east end of the route, and the other commencing at the west end of the route, it would take a great length of time for such feeble, unaided and disconcerted operators, to effect a junction of their labors, and in all probability they never would open any thing like a direct route through the country. Hence the necessity of some well concerted plan, either by a company or by the state, or by both in conjunction, to open a route through these northern lands.

The objection which has been started by some might be obviated. They say "that a road of this length, through a wilderness country cannot be kept open." But in case the owners of each township on the route would give one thousand acres of land to ten actual settlers on each township; and in addition to that, let the owner or owners of two townships join in giving to the twenty settlers a bolting cloth, a pair of mill-stones, a set of grist-mill and saw-mill irons, and a cask of nails, and the road would surely be kept open. This northern country is surely as good a country as the generality of the New-England country, where the people do well. There are real advantages in this northern region for men of capital. The iron ore is imbosomed in the earth, the fuel is on the surface of it, and the water power is abundant for all manufacturing purposes. The soil is capable of feeding a million of people, where there is not one human being residing, to this moment, on all these northern lands. Open roads through these lands, and the resources of it will be developed. Its timber is excellent for all the purposes of life. But it has been said, that there is no way to get the timber to market, therefore it is good for nothing. But we know that nature has done almost every thing towards accomplishing that business. A few hundreds of dollars expense would remove the rocks in the Hudson, so that not only logs, but any long spars would float at a moderate pitch of water from the head of the river to Albany with ease: And those branches of the river which interlock with the Canada creeks, and with the waters of the Black river, can be improved at a very trifling expense, so that timber would float into the Hudson from the heads of these branches: And it is also a fact, that the waters of the North river, and the waters of the Racket river, might be united, at a very small expense, by a short cut from the head of a still brook, (being a branch of the North river,) to the side of the Long lake, so as to tap the lake, and by so doing, it would improve the main and head branch of the river very much for floating down timber. The pine of the country, in a few years more, will be nearly extinct, and even timber for fencing and fuel is already getting scarce in many places: The spruce, hemlock, ash and basswood of the north, must be substituted for pine; and a very few thousands of dollars would prepare the streams so as to float it down in abundance to supply the wants of the southern portion of the state.

In conclusion the commissioners beg leave to make one or two remarks, (though perhaps a little out of place.) An opinion has been prevalent abroad, that the northern lands are good for nothing. The phrase used is, "the northern lands do not settle—therefore they are good for nothing." Now to say, that because at present an article is rather too plenty in the market, therefore it is good for nothing, is rather a singular kind of logic; and the more so, when the fact is adverted to, that those who make such an assertion know nothing of the value of the article in question, and never have seen it; and yet they say, because somebody did not purchase the article, it is not good for any thing. But we say, open a way so that the article can be seen and examined by good judges. It is very true, that the northern lands will not compare with the western lands in point of fertility or richness of soil; but it is just as true, that there are some very valuable privileges to be enjoyed to a far greater degree in the northern portion of the state, than they are enjoyed in the western portion of it; such as pure air, good and wholesome water, and of course the blessings of good health, strength of body, and an ability to endure more labor and fatigue, with more cheerfulness and comfort. So that more hardy children can be raised in the north, than can be raised in the west, and at much less expense too.

The northern soil is capable of producing food in abundance for a very dense population; and the manufacturer will find here materials in great plenty to carry on his business to any extent that may be desired. Capital and industry are the only requisites to make this northern region both prosperous and great.

JOHN RICHARDS,
NATHAN SHERMAN,
Commissioners.

	165 chains, 80 links.	151 chains.

By the above table, it is seen, that there is 165 chains, 80 links of rocky ground on the whole route, and part of it is not very rocky, and how much of such land there is on each section. Also the same table shews, that there is on the route 151 chains of swampy, marshy or wet ground, and how much thereof lies in the different sections.

All the rest of the sections and parts of sections, were deemed to be an average chance for constructing a road; although in many places not clear of stones, and perhaps some rocks: but still such places did not present any great difficulty in making a road. Of medium land on the route, there is 5,498 chains and 15 links, or 68 miles, 58 chains, 15 links. And of the rocky and swampy land on the route, there is 316 chains, 80 links, or 3 miles, 76 chains, 80 links; making a distance, in all, of 72 miles, 54 chains, 80 links.

Estimating the cost at an average price of one dollar per rod, the amount of cost will be $23,259. And also for building bridges on the whole route, we estimate the cost at $350.

The commissioners appointed by an act of the legislature of the state of New-York, passed April 21st, 1828, for the purpose of exploring, laying out and opening a road from Cedar Point, westward, through the towns of Moriah and Newcomb, in the county of Essex, beg leave to make a brief statement of their doings in relation to the said road. The commissioners did explore the country in various directions, for the purpose of finding a good route for the road; and after encountering some difficulties, in so uneven a country, they are perfectly satisfied that they have found a route, where a good road may be constructed. They have surveyed the same, and made returns of the map and assessment roll (embracing all the lands lying within three miles of the said road) to the comptroller's office. The commissioners have also made contracts with a number of individuals, to construct the whole road, at an average price of about three hundred dollars per mile; the whole to be completed in the course of next season: And these contractors are preparing their implements, tools and provisions for their jobs, building temporary huts to secure their provisions, until the spring opens, so that they may commence their operations as early in the season as possible. There is about twelve miles and three quarters of the road nearly completed; so much so, that the lumber from West Moriah, (nearly all of it) is taken on this road to Lake Champlain, at Cedar Point, regularly all this winter, in the state this section is now in. A span of horses will take, at a load, from seventy-five to an hundred plank, over from Schroon river to the lake.

JOHN RICHARDS,

Two several petitions of sundry inhabitants of the town of Richmond in the county of Ontario, praying for a division of that town, were read, and referred to the committee on the erection and division of towns and counties.

The petition of sundry inhabitants of the county of Montgomery, praying for the incorporation of a company to construct a rail-road from Otsego lake to the Erie canal, was read, and committed to a committee of the whole when on the bill upon that subject.

Mr. Burt, from the committee on the establishment and improvement of roads and bridges, and the incorporation of turnpike companies, to which was referred the memorial of the president and directors of the First Great Southwestern turnpike road company, reported:

That although their own investigations have extended back to the first incorporation in 1805, under which twenty-four miles of this road had been then already completed, yet they are of opinion that the present inquiry for every necessary and useful purpose of deciding on the merits of the case presented, is limited to the period of the act of incorporation, passed March 28th, 1817, which granted an assessment on the lands adjacent to this road, lying within eight miles from its site.

After the assessment under the latter act had been made and delivered over to the directors of this company, and before any monies had been collected, it was on the complaint of a single individual whose land had been assessed, removed by certiorari into the supreme court, who exercised an authority by injunction to restrain the directors from enforcing the payment of the monies assessed; which suspension continued from the spring of 1818 till the August term of the supreme court in 1820, when the assessment was pronounced invalid, on no other ground than for not having been completed before the power vested in the commissioners appointed to make it, had, in the judgment of the court, ceased; who so construed their authority, as to be impliedly limited within the period of time that the first instalment of the monies to be assessed, was made payable in the act.

All the evils complained of, originated out of this suspension and ultimate decision. The necessity or propriety of authorising such an assessment, the committee think, cannot now be considered an appropriate or material inquiry, inasmuch as the policy and responsibility of authorising assessments for roads, rested with the legislature who made the grant—by whose enactment it became a vested right in this incorporation, which any subsequent legislative body are bound to respect and uphold, as an authority passed from the legislature to the incorporation. That this authority was not given without the fullest inquiry and investigation is apparent. It is ascertained from our journals of legislation, that the first application for the grant was made two years antecedent to its passage, and was acted upon by the senate in that and the succeeding session; but in both those sessions it did not finally pass. It remained unacted upon definitively, among the unfinished business of the senate, in the first session.

and of the assembly, after having again passed the senate in the second session, Thus it appears, that previous to three successive applications, public notices of the intention to apply for such a grant, had been published in newspapers printed in each county through which the road was to pass, and also by the state printer. The general law under which such publicity was given, was intended seasonably to apprise the whole community of the application. It cannot, therefore, be supposed that any individual, who felt an interest to resist the passage of the grant, can seriously allege that it was surreptitiously obtained.

By the act of incorporation, passed March 28th, 1817, the legislature authorised an assessment to be made for the use of the company, who became bound therewith to complete a road, principally through an unsettled wilderness of one hundred and two miles in length, and directed the person administering the government, by and with the advice and consent of the council of appointment, to appoint three discreet and disinterested persons, to make such assessment. In the execution of the powers thus delegated, the agents appointed by the state, failed; which discomfiture has subjected the company to an expense of $5,950, in making the necessary assessments and surveys, besides the entire labor, equal to about thirty miles of finished road, made under contracts requiring all the work to be done in advance, and to be completed before January 1820; for which a compensation of $1,200 per mile was due from the company to their contractor.

From the facts above detailed, the minds of the committee have been drawn into a belief that it is within the power of the legislature, either to confirm the assessment so deliberately made and completed, or to authorise one to be made in the place of it. Such a measure, if deemed advisable, would so far replace this company in its original situation, and reduce the responsibility on us to a simple additional provision for cancelling the claims which have grown out of the interruption and its long delay. For although a legislature is not amenable to the authority of courts of law or equity, still, as the dispensers of justice, they are deemed to be incapable of denying to a citizen, a claim which would be enforced by our courts as an obligation from one individual to another. When an individual obligates himself to another by a contract, for the performance of something specific, courts of equity will enforce a performance of such engagement. And we can perceive no well-founded objection to an act of confirmation; for it appears from a report made by a committee of the senate, upon a petition for a confirmation, that on first consulting the judges before whom the validity of the assessment had been contested, and the consideration of it pending, that those judges strongly recommended such a course to be taken; stating, that for giving the company an opportunity to pursue it, they had delayed making a decision upon it. A bill was accordingly reported for that purpose, and passed in committee of the whole house, where it rested the remainder of the session.

By a recurrence to the laws passed in the session of 1821, we find an act for confirming an assessment authorised to enable the Orange branch turnpike company to make a branch road from Newburgh into this main road. That act not only confirms the assessment, but also the sales of lands made under it; and affords no further relief to the complainants than an extension of the time to redeem their lands from forfeiture, about nine months.

Another law was passed in the same session which provided payment to the commissioners appointed for making this assessment, which imports a full admission of an equitable claim for compensation for services performed; although those services, by the decision of the court, became unavailable, a disinterested location of the road would naturally create disappointments, and a consequent unwillingness in some few instances to pay the assessment imposed for its construction. It does not therefore appear to be a rash or improper conclusion, that no culpable charge can be attributed to the commissioners in the performance of their duties, but rather that this application has arisen from an improvident omission or oversight of the legislature, in the mode of assessment prescribed by the act of incorporation.

The peculiar nature of the inquiry imposes on the committee a duty to make a detailed report which should furnish to the house the reasons which have governed them; and in arriving at their conclusion, that it is as a matter of right, and that their opinions should influence any member either for or against the relief prayed for by the company, but that the question might have a full investigation in the legislature, and if they are entitled to receive of the state compensation by reason of not enjoying the benefit of the above mentioned law, then they should be relieved from further expense and time in prosecuting their pretended claim.

They have prepared a bill under the circumstances alluded to in their report, and have directed their chairman to ask leave to introduce the same.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Burt, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to confirm an act entitled 'An act to amend the act incorporating the Neversink turnpike road company, and for altering the name and style of the said company,' passed March 28th, 1817;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Ordered, That the usual number of copies of the said bill and report be printed for the use of the legislature.

Mr. Skinner, from the committee on colleges, academies and common schools, to which was referred the petition of the trustees of school district number 8 in the town of York in the county of Livingston, praying for a certain amendment of the law passed at the last session of the legislature, authorising said trustees to sell the old school lot belonging to said district, asked for leave to report by bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Skinner, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to amend an act authorising the trustees of school district number eight in the town of York, to sell the old school lot belonging to the said district;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Judd, from the committee on medical subjects, to whom was referred the petition of Samuel Osborn, M. D. and Felix Pascalis, M. D., praying for a repeal or modification of certain parts of the revised statutes, relating to the practice of physic and surgery within this state, and also a communication or report from the late revisers upon the same subject, reported:

That the petitioners complain "that so much of the revised statutes as requires practising physicians and surgeons to unite themselves to the county medical societies in which they belong, is a violation of the charter and corporate rights of the medical society," &c. And it further appears to the committee, that one of the principal arguments of the petitioners is, to answer a memorial or petition presented to the legislature in the winter of 1828, by the medical society of the city and county of New-York, approving of the revised statutes upon that subject, which said petition has not been referred to the committee.

Accompanying this petition, is the proceedings of a meeting of the medical profession, held in the city of New-York, on the 25th of January, 1828, of which Samuel L. Mitchill was chairman; at which meeting certain resolutions were passed, complaining of the late revised statutes, as expressed by the petitioners in their petition.

The committee are fully aware of the highly respectable character for talents and medical standing, of the petitioners, as well as of the gentlemen comprising the meeting, to which reference is made above; and they have therefore given the subject a more particular examination upon that account.

It will be recollected, that the provisions of the revised statutes complained of, were enacted in the fall session of 1827, and took effect on the first day of January, 1828, only twenty-five days before the meeting of the medical profession, the proceedings of which accompany the petition, as above stated, and consequently, before any particular practical operation of the said revised statutes could have been witnessed; and indeed no such operation is complained of by the petitioners.

It is now more than a year since the revised statutes complained of went into operation, and since the proceedings of the meeting of the medical profession in the city of New-York, above alluded to, were published; during which time have been held the annual and semi-annual meetings of the several county medical societies in this state; and the annual meeting of the state medical society has been recently held also; at none of which meetings has the operation of the said revised statutes been complained of, or their provisions disapproved. On the contrary, so far as the committee have been able to discover, those very provisions have been, in many instances, highly commended, and particularly by the medical society of the city and county of New-York.

The committee are informed, from a source of unquestionable authority, that at the late meeting of the medical society of the city and county of New-York, there was passed a resolution in these word, to wit: "That the recently modified laws, regulating the practice of physic and surgery in this state, have not been in operation a sufficient length of time to enable us to judge of their true value, and that we deem it inexpedient to make any alterations in them at the present time."

The committee would also state, that the subject complained of by the petioners relates wholly and exclusively to regularly licensed practitioners, and to them alone; and therefore it has appeared to the committee, that, inasmuch as the great body of the regular physicians and surgeons in the state have not only not complained of the said revised statutes, but have approved of them, it would be inexpedient to repeal the said laws, according to the prayer of the petitioners.

Before concluding this report, the committee beg leave to observe, that they are aware of the very considerable excitement which prevails in many parts of the state, in relation to some parts of the late revised statutes upon this subject; and in proof of this, the committee have only to refer to the numerous petitions, now upon our tables. Those petitions not having been referred to the committee, it does not become them to speak of their merits; yet they would observe in relation to them, that so far as they have been informed, they complain of other parts of the revised statutes, not having reference to, or any connection with, that part complained of by the petition referred to the committee.

The committee, therefore, take this occasion to observe, that what they say in this report, and the conclusion to which they come, is not intended to have any reference to, or bearing upon the merits of such petitions; while they will observe, generally, that no law upon any subject can ever be expected to meet the views of all, or to be perfectly satisfactory to every man; and it is not strange or surprising, that upon a subject so vitally important to every member of community, there should exist great diversity of opinion, as to the most proper manner of regulating the same.

The committee will conclude by expressing their firm and decided belief, that there cannot be found any one, at this day, and in this age, who would advocate the abrogation of all law, regulating the practice of physic and surgery within this state; at the same time, they are free to admit, that, possibly some improvement might be made in the laws upon this subject, as they at present exist; yet, as perfection is never to be expected in any human regulation, and as has been already observed, the revised statutes upon this subject have been so recently passed upon by a legislature in whom the committee had full confidence, they cannot refrain from expressing their doubt of the propriety, or necessity of interfering with the said laws, generally, or partially, at this time.

The committee have instructed their chairman to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That it is inexpedient at this time, to alter or amend the present laws, regulating the practice of physic and surgery in this state, and that the petitioners have leave to withdraw their petition.

Thereupon,

Mr. Speaker put the question whether the house would agree to the said resolution, and it was determined in the affirmative.

Mr. Savage, from the committee on grievances, to which was referred the petition of Mary Roberts, praying to be divorced from her husband, reported:

That the committee have entered upon an examination of the subject referred to them, with all that attention and consideration which its delicacy would seem to require.

It appears from the documents before the committee, that the petitioner united herself in marriage with John Roberts, in January 1824; that previous to their union, the parties had no very intimate acquaintance with each other, until about four weeks prior to the nuptial ceremony; that the said John Roberts, on account of his corporal imbecility, was utterly incompetent to enter into the solemn contract of marriage.

The petitioner alleges that she never would have entered into the contract with the said John, if she had had any knowledge of his incapacity. The want of knowledge may be a grievance; but the committee are not prepared to say that she acted improperly in uniting herself with him without testing his capacity; neither are they prepared to say that the doctrine of quia emptores can be applied to the case before them. Divorces, in days of yore, were allowed for a great variety, and in many instances for very trifling causes. Thus, at Rome, barrenness, age, disease, madness and banishment, were the ordinary causes; to which Justinian afterwards added many others, and amongst which was that of impotency, the case for which the petitioner seeks a divorce. The Grecian laws concerning divorces, were different: The Cretans allowed divorces to a man who apprehended too great an increase in his family: The Athenians allowed divorces for many and very slight causes, which the committee deem it unnecessary to enumerate. Among the Jews, besides incontinence, ugliness, old age, or ill humour in the wife, were sufficient reasons for giving her a bill of divorce; nay, even the man's own pleasure, or the repenting of his match, were admitted as good reasons. The Mahometan law upon the subject of divorces, does not vary essentially from the Mosaic. And the committee would remark generally, that divorces have been tolerated and allowed in all ages and in all countries, whether in a state of civilization or barbarity. They would not, however, be understood, from this general remark, as yielding their assent to the opinion that divorces have in all countries been granted for justifiable causes. Their opinion is the reverse. They can not but view a facility of separation as tending to the destruction of all mutual confidence, and producing the direct effect of inflaming and magnifying every trifling misunderstanding into a sufficient cause to induce an application for a separation.

According to Blackstone, an author whose name the committee conceive may not inappropriately be introduced on this occasion, divorces in England are of two kinds; the one total, the other partial; the one a vinculo matrimonii, the other a mensa et thoro. And that learned author remarks, that "if the cause existed previous to the marriage, and was such an one as rendered the marriage unlawful ab initio, as consanguinity, corporal imbecility, or the like; in this case the law looks upon the marriage to have been always null and void, being contracted fraudum legis, and decrees not only a separation from bed and board, but a vinculo matrimonii itself."

The committee also find that by the revised laws of our own state, which however have not yet gone into operation, the case of the petitioner is recognized as a good cause for divorce; and were these statutes now in force, the committee would deem legislation on the subject unnecessary. But inasmuch as the petitioner is obliged to support herself by hard labor in the capacity of a servant, and her earnings are demanded from her employers by her husband, and the employer rendered liable to a prosecution for those earnings, they view her case as entitled to the favorable consideration of the legislature.

The committee would remark, in addition, that it fully appears before them, that the said Mary found it necessary to leave her said husband in November 1827, in consequence of a continued series of abuse, beating, and violent ill treatment; and that since that time, she has had to depend wholly upon her own resources as above stated, for her support: That the fact of the husband's incapacity is established, not only by the oath of the said Mary, but also by several accompanying affidavits; and among others, by the affidavit of an individual who made a personal examination of the said John Roberts.

It may not be improper to remark, that the committee is composed entirely of laymen; and should they have arrived at a wrong conclusion upon the matter submitted to them, the professional part of the house will have ample opportunity of correcting it. Upon the whole, they have concluded to administer to the wants of the petitioner, so far as law will go to relieve her destitute condition; and should this prove inadequate, they would leave it to a more ingenious portion of the house to devise a way to redress her grievances. The committee have instructed their chairman to ask leave to introduce a bill for the relief of the petitioner.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in sueh bill.

Mr. Savage, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act granting a divorce to Mary Roberts;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Starr, from the select committee to which was referred the petition of Ann Eliza Babcock, praying for an alteration of her name, reported:

That the petitioner is an orphan: That for several years past, she has resided in the family of James Sealy, of the city of Albany: That the said Sealy and his wife, who are aged and respectable people, and without children, have recently adopted the petitioner, and that it is their intention to make her the heir of what property they may possess at their decease. Under these circumstances, the committee see no reason why the prayer of the petitioner should not be granted, and have accordingly instructed their chairman to ask leave to bring in a bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Starr, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act authorising Ann Eliza Babcock to take the maiden name of Sealy;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Skinner, from the select committee to which was referred the engrossed bill from the Senate, entitled "An act directing the manner of choosing electors of president and vice-president," reported, that they have examined the said bill, prepared an amendment thereto, with which see no reason why the same should not be passed into a law.

Ordered, That the said bill and amendment be committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Hazeltine, from the select committee to which was referred so much of the message of his excellency the governor, as relates to the abduction of William Morgan, and the proceedings under the act passed the 15th day of April, 1828, reported in part:

That they have endeavored to give the subject that attention which its importance demands, and to pursue their investigations in that spirit of candor that should characterise an inquiry into matters of so much delicacy; and respecting which, there exists great public excitement. They cannot flatter themselves however, that they have carried nothing of feeling with them, into the investigation of the subject; for coming, as most of them do, from what has been sometimes termed the "infected district," it is hardly to be supposed, that they should be indifferent, in the midst of a community greatly agitated. Still, they trust, that they have so far succeeded in discussing it dispassionately, as to lay before you no facts, except such as have the impress of authenticity, and to draw no inferences, which are not fairly deducible from established premises.

The message of his excellency the governor, treats the subject as one which may require the interposition of the legislature, and to the committee has been assigned the task of ascertaining what legislation is necessary. It being highly important that the legislature should be in possession of the facts in every case, respecting which they may be called to legislate, the committee believed it to be their duty to collect and spread before this house a statement of the circumstances of this extraordinary affair, together with the causes which produced them, so far as the same have been ascertained. For this purpose, they directed their chairman to address letters to the Hon. Daniel Moseley, special counsel, appointed by the executive of this state, under the act passed April 15, 1828, and to Bowen Whiting, Esquire, district attorney for the county of Ontario, requesting from them, a statement in detail, of such particulars of the transaction as may have come to their knowledge, in the discharge of their official duties.

The committee were aware that the circumstances relating to the Morgan outrages, had been collected and published in a pamphlet form, and in some public newspapers, by a number of respectable gentlemen, selected for that purpose, by their fellow-citizens in public meetings; and that notwithstanding these gentlemen, some of whom have seats in this house, affixed their own signatures to these publications, no attempt had been made to disprove their statements. Still, as there exists a disposition in our country to discredit statements which are made through the organ of the periodical press, and it being desirable to lay before this house such data as might with proper safety be relied upon, by those who may be called to act in this grave matter, the committee thought it better to refer you to statements emanating from those whose official duties have made them acquainted with these singular transactions. It has been too long the opinion of many that the "western excitement" belonged more properly to our newspaper, than to our judicial history; and events more alarming in their character, when viewed in all their bearings, than any that have transpired in the course of many years, have been regarded rather as romance than as solemn matters of fact. In making this statement, the committee mean no reflection upon the intelligence of this house or this community. The state of feeling and the incredulity that have existed in many places, with regard to this matter, have proceeded from an honorable confidence in our free institutions, and in the integrity of our fellow-citizens, which bespeak great elevation of sentiment and nobleness of spirit; but which at the same time shews with what ease our good nature may be practised upon by the artful and designing.

The call for information, made upon Mr. Whiting, was answered by the accompanying statement, marked A. And the committee would take the liberty of expressing their acknowledgments to this gentleman for his promptitude and frankness in preparing for them, in midst of pressing professional engagements, a statement so full and satisfactory.

From this statement, it appears, that in the summer of 1826, a notice was inserted in the Ontario Messenger, a newspaper published at Canandaigua, by the procurement of some of those who were afterwards concerned in the outrages, representing Morgan to be guilty of bad conduct, and that particular information might be had respecting him, on application to the lodge in that village. During the summer of that year, it was reported that Morgan was writing a book on free masonry, to be published by David C. Miller of Batavia; and this report was confirmed by subsequent events. Much feeling was excited amongst many members of the masonic fraternity, in consequence of this report; and meetings were held in many places, to consider of measures by which the publication of the book might be prevented. A Canadian, whose name is Johns, and who is said to have belonged to the British fur company, was introduced to Miller, under pretence of assisting him in the publication, but in reality for the purpose of acquiring information where Morgan's writings were to be found. Through his aid, the conspirators were enabled to obtain the possession of a part, at least, of Morgan's manuscripts.

On the 11th of September, persons from Lockport, in the county of Niagara, 90 miles distant from Canandaigua, applied at Fort Niagara for a place of confinement for Morgan, because he was about "to reveal the secrets of masonry." The day before, Ebenezer C. Kingsley, of Canandaigua, by the persuasion of Nicholas G. Cheesebro and other, of that place, made a complaint against Morgan, before a magistrate, for stealing a shirt and cravat, the property of Kingsley. A warrant was issued on this complaint by the magistrate, directed to Cheesebro, as one of the coroners of Ontario county, or to any constable of that county, for Morgan's arrest. It was delivered to Cheesebro, who hired a post-coach, and procured Holloway Hayward, a constable, and three or four others, to accompany him to Batavia, where Morgan resided. The party arrived at Batavia the same day, and the next morning the warrant was served by Hayward, it having been first endorsed by a magistrate of Genesee county. Immediately after the arrest, the same party returned to Canandaigua, and arrived in the evening. Morgan was taken before the magistrate, examined and discharged from the arrest, the charge of larceny appearing to be unfounded, the shirt and cravat having been borrowed from Kingsley.

Immediately on his being discharged, a demand of two dollars was presented to the justice against him, in favor of Cheesebro, as assignee of one Ackley. Morgan confessed a judgment, and an execution forthwith issued. He took off his coat and offered it to satisfy the execution, but it was refused, and he was arrested and locked up in prison.

Information that Morgan was in custody, was immediately sent to Rochester to certain persons there, or to use the language of Cheesebro, to Morgan's friends in that place, some of whom came to Canandaigua the next day, for the purpose of carrying him off. A carriage was stationed a few rods from the gaol, where it might be ready to start at a given signal. Previous to this, Loton Lawson had been at the gaol, had seen Morgan, and proposed to Mrs. Hall, the wife of the gaoler, (he being absent,) to pay the debt out of friendship to Morgan, and release him from prison. Mrs. Hall at first refused to comply, but on Cheesebro and Sawyer's recommending it, she consented to release Morgan. As she went towards the prison, Lawson went to the street door and made a signal. She turned, and saw a man come up the steps. She released Morgan, and on going to the door, saw him between Lawson and the man who came up the steps, struggling and crying murder. His mouth was stopped, and he was forced off down the street. In the struggle, Morgan lost his hat. One of the party made a signal by rapping on a well curb, when the carriage started after them, took them in, and went towards Rochester.

The carriage was driven by Hiram Hubbard, who has testified that he drove the party a little beyond Handford's Landing, near the east end of the Ridge Roard, where he arrived about sunrise; and that they got out at a place, distant from any house. On his return, and at a short distance from the place where he left the party, he met a carriage with a pair of horses. The same day, a carriage was procured from Ezra Platt, of Rochester, under pretence of going to Lewiston, to the installation of a lodge. Mr. Platt has been examined as a witness, and denies recollecting who hired the carriage. He says that it was applied for before day light, and that the driver has left the country, but that he does not now recollect his name. On that day, a carriage passed along the Ridge-Road to Lewiston, under peculiar and extraordinary circumstances, not stopping at public houses, drawn by horses belonging to persons living on the road, which were changed in bye-places, and driven by men who would not ordinarily be engaged in that business. This carriage stopped in a back street at Lewiston; and on the morning of the 14th, at a very early hour, another carriage was procured to go to Fort Niagara. The latter carriage was driven by Corydon Fox, a stage driver, who was directed to go to the one standing in the back street for his passengers. Fox states that he did so; that four or five men left that carriage and got into the one driven by him. One of the men had no hat, and appeared to be helpless. He then drove towards the fort, called by the way at Col. King's, took him in, and when near the fort, left the whole party in the road, and returned to Lewiston. It is proved, that on that day, a man was in confinement in the magazine attached to the fort. Mr. Whiting adds, that it can now be proved that Morgan was in the carriage that passed along the Ridge-Road on the 13th of September, 1826.

He also subjoins a statement of the testimony of Edward Giddins before the grand jury of Ontario county, and which said Giddins has published. Mr. Giddins, on the trial of Eli Bruce, Esquire, late sheriff of Niagara, was offered a a witness and rejected, on the ground of religious belief. Mr. Whiting, however, seems to credit his statements, which he says are corroborated in some important particulars by other witnesses. From his statement we learn, that Morgan was confined in the magazine at Fort Niagara; and if we give his statement credence, we must come to the conclusion, that he was finally murdered. Mr. Whiting comes to that conclusion independent of the testimony of Giddins; and the committee believe that he is fully warranted in so doing, by the facts and circumstances which he has detailed. Mr. Moseley, in his communication to the committee, which also accompanies this report, states that he has ascertained material testimony in relation to the abduction, since the making of his report to the executive; and adds that he has been put in possession of some information of a graver character, from a source entitled to credit. The committee, therefore, feel justified in saying, that there is very little reason to doubt but that a free citizen of this state has been deliberately put to death by highly respectable individuals, and that many men in high standing were privy to the designs against him, and assisted in the preliminary measures, although perhaps but few directly participated in the final catastrophe.

It may be proper to mention in this connection, that at a trial at Batavia, not particularly referred to by Mr. Whiting, three men were convicted of a daring outrage upon the person and liberty of Col. Miller, who was associated with Morgan in the publication of the book on masonry. This outrage was committed on the same day that Morgan was forcibly carried away from the gaol at Canandaigua. A principal actor in this affair, was the Canadian, Johns, who, eight days before, had suddenly disappeared from Batavia. But the committee will not tax the patience of this house, by a recital of the particulars of this outrage, and of several others committed or attempted against the persons and property of Miller and Morgan, and in which many persons are known to have participated.

Although the special counsel appointed by the executive, has interposed a caution against speaking of "societies and denominations of men," in relation to the subject of these inquiries, the committee feel bound to state, that in their opinion, if the abduction of Morgan is chargeable upon individuals, acting "as such," it is likewise chargeable upon them as members of a powerful society, existing in our state, claiming a high character, on which has been bestowed many marks of public favor, and whose annual convocations and dazzling honors have been regarded with great interest, and sought for with much avidity. The committee are not insensible that they are preferring a grave charge against an institution, which has many bright and honorable names enrolled amongst its votaries; still they conceive that the true character of the transaction, and its relative importance, are to be ascertained by adverting to the causes which produced it, and the motives which actuated the perpetrators.

The active and persevering district attorney of the county of Ontario, who has carefully investigated the whole matter, states it as proved, "that the motives which actuated those who conspired against Morgan, were to prevent the publication of his book on free-masonry. The same objects were avowed in the meetings in Genesee county, by those who visited Fort Niagara, by those who acted in Canandaigua, and by those who came to Canandaigua in consequence of the information sent to Rochester. So far, therefore, as their motives were then avowed, the suppression of Morgan's publication was the object to be effected, and the abduction of the man was the means by which that object was to be accomplished."

"The abduction of Morgan," says Mr. Whiting, "is a singular and striking event in our history; and as in case of other irretrievable evils, it is easier to lament it, than to find a remedy. I have no hesitation in saying, that it has resulted from the confidence which members of the masonic society have felt in its power and influence; from a false estimate of the value of that institution, and from an opinion that they were bound to preserve it from violation and injury." And he adds in conclusion, "It is worthy of remark, that it has been proved or conceded, that all those who have engaged in these outrages were members of the masonic fraternity, a fact not without meaning in reference to the objects of the conspiracy."

A proper consideration of these facts, fully established by solemn judicial investigation, will lead to a due estimate of the subject, referred to by the committee. Some have wondered why the abduction, or even the murder, of a comparatively obscure individual, should be considered of so much importance. Had he fallen in deadly strife with his fellow, or had a single assassin planted a dagger in his heart, the event and its circumstances would long since have ceased to interest the public. It is the offence against the dignity of this state, and the just grounds of alarm, indicated by the character of the transaction, which gives it its relative importance. Many cases of personal suffering may be pointed out in our history, which, if the individuals only are to be taken into consideration, must be regarded as much more afflictive, than the case of the American seaman, who was shot by British authority in the harbor of New-York, and whose death caused such great sensation. Still his death was justly considered a matter of national concern, whilst others, who fell by private assassins, were soon forgotten. A wound was inflicted upon our national honor, which awakened the sensibilities of this whole nation. We felt, that such aggressions on our sovereignty should be repelled, and that the permanence and stability of our institutions could only be secured, by showing our neighbors that such acts could not be committed with impunity. If the spirit and feelings that were then excited were just and proper; if that event was considered an alarming outrage, principally in consequence of the source from which it proceeded, does it not follow that the offence committed against the majesty of the people, in the case of William Morgan, should excite general interest. The members of a wide spread association, whose principles and operations are studiously concealed from the public view; who claim for their body high antiquity and distinguished renown; who assume imposing titles, and display the badges of royalty, feeling themselves bound to preserve their own institution from violation, have violated the majesty of the laws, and trampled upon those fundamental principles, on which are based our free institutions.

The committee believe, that such an act, from such a quarter, is to be regarded as more alarming in its character than a simple outrage, committed by the agents of a foreign government. It is much more easy to repel the assaults of a foreign enemy, than to counteract the wiles and machinations of a domestic foe. The security of our free institutions, in a great measure, depends upon their due estimation by those who enjoy their benefits. If our honorable, learned and influential citizens consider themselves bound to an invisible power, existing amongst us, by stronger ties than their allegiance to that country which so amply protects them in the enjoyment of life and liberty, and in the prosecution of those pursuits which they deem essential to their happiness; if reckoning upon the strength and influence of that power, and with a direct view to its preservation, they venture upon the exercise of the highest acts of sovereignty, thus contemning the sovereign authority of this state, have we not just ground for alarm?

The committee are sensible that they have stated a strong case, but have they stated a stronger one than is detailed by Mr. Whiting, if we allow that he has not mistaken the true character of the transaction, and the motives of the actors in that sad tragedy? What have they alleged, that is not fully said by a faithful public officer, who has had every opportunity to judge correctly in this matter, and whose relation to those concerned, precludes the idea, that he has misconstrued their motives? Well might the distinguished public officer, who now presides over the other branch of the legislature, say, that those who perpetrated this outrage, "have disturbed the public peace, have dared to raise their paricidal arms against the laws and constitution of our government, and assumed a power which is incompatible with a due subordination to the laws and public authority of this state." Following up the idea of the same distinguished individual, the committee add, that such attacks upon the sovereign power, of which every citizen is a constituent member, should be resented and guarded against.

The committee believe that an idea has too long prevailed, that this is a trivial affair; and therefore, they have dwelt longer upon this branch of the subject, than would otherwise have been necessary. They forbear to descant upon the reasons that have given currency to this idea, and the cold indifference with which it has been regarded, by a body of men whose members, for a series of years, have filled a great proportion of the responsible stations in every department of the government. The citizens of those counties where these outrages were perpetrated, when they discovered the intimate connection between them and freemasonry, expected that the members and officers of that institution would have been foremost in ferreting out the guilty individuals, and unwearied in their exertions to wipe from its escutcheon so foul a stain. It was certainly reasonable to suppose that an institution laying claim to the greatest purity of principle, would have made liberal contributions of its funds and exertions, in bringing to light this dark, nefarious and alarming transaction; that at least, they would have affixed some mark of disapprobation upon those whose conduct was so criminal, and so directly calculated to bring their fraternity into disrepute. The committee cannot learn however, that any such measures were deemed necessary by the institution. They cannot but think that this apparent apathy solemnly admonishes us, as a people, to inquire into its causes; and why it is, that when members of this society are frequently debarred from its privileges, for offences which are not cognizable before our courts, the perpetrators of these flagrant enormities should not be considered guilty of "unmasonic conduct," and treated accordingly. The inquiry naturally suggests itself, was that confidence in the power and influence of their society which led these men to the commission of such crimes, such as the principles of that society warranted them in entertaining; and was their construction of their masonic obligations, that which is fairly inferrable from those obligations? The standing of these men in society and with the craft; their numbers; their avowed motives, with reference to this affair; and the treatment they have received from their brethren, certainly justify the presumption that they were not mistaken; and would, if we had no other evidence, afford the strongest grounds for suspicion. But on this subject. we are not left to conjecture. The principles and obligations of masonry are well known to at least one member of the committee; and they afford a complete solution to this inquiry. Several of the obligations, taken by members of this society, as published by a convention of seceding masons, who were led to an examination of the principles of the institution, in consequence of the outrages committed in their neighborhood, were laid before the legislature at the last session, and are herewith submitted, for the consideration of this house. These obligations, taken in connection with those published by Morgan, (for the authenticity of which, we have evidence of the most conclusive, as well as the most painful kind,) too plainly show the truly appaling fact, that those deluded men whose hands are probably stained with a brother's blood, though politically and morally wrong, were masonically right. This, in the view of the committee, is the most distressing and alarming feature in the whole transaction.

To the sincere patriot, to every citizen, it affords matter for grave reflection, that these men, some of whom have had seats in this house, and held high and responsible stations, should have calculated with so much confidence on being shielded from public vengeance, although guilty of high enormities, by the power and influence of a secret society. Whether they supposed that their society afforded facilities for the commisssion of crimes, without the possibility of detection, or whether they calculated on corrupting the fountains of justice. the fact is equally interesting to every lover of his country. Did these men suppose, that masons in high stations would interpose the broad shield of their authority to protect them in their high handed villainy, in their "preconcerted and deliberate" attack upon the laws and constitutions of their country? Did they suppose, that witnesses and jurors, feeling themselves bound by masonic obligations, would lose sight of their duty to their country and their God? The committee take no pleasure in dwelling upon this subject; still, it is one which requires a thorough investigation. A society of men, who meet in secret, embracing all ranks of life, comprising many men of talents, and a very large proportion of those who hold high and responsible stations, is looked up to with confidence by its intelligent and respectable members, as affording a sure protection from the consequences of the most infamous and dangerous crimes; and what is worse, as binding them, in certain cases to the commission of crimes. Yet this society boasts of her charities, professes to teach the most expansive benevolence, and carries in her public processions the volume of inspiration. Why this confidence? How do they expect protection in such cases, except by trampling under foot all that is dear to us as freemen?

Whether the existence of such a society, holding her meetings in secret places, guarding the entrance to their conclaves with the instruments of death, binding her votaries with such ties, affording them protection when in difficulty, "right or wrong," regarding her own laws as paramount to the laws of the land, is incompatible with our free institutions, should be taken into serious consideration. The subject addresses itself to our love of country, in the most imposing form; and however disagreeable it may be, we should not shrink from the examination.

The committee are aware, that any measures which may be taken, with the view of removing this evil, will be called intolerant. It will be said, that the society or sect of freemasons, are entitled to the same protection as other associations for charitable purposes and mutual improvement. There can be no question but that freemasons have a right to assemble, and transact their business in their own way, so long as their business is lawful, and they in no way injure others, or endanger the state. But that men may meet for any purpose, and form associations, whose tendency is to screen the guilty and sap the foundations of civil liberty, is inconsistent with the genius of our government. Every government has the right to provide for its own safety, and to prohibit any thing that tends to its own subversion. A government without such right could be of no value to the community that adopted it.

If freemasonry has dangerous features, there certainly can be no doubt of the right of the legislature to require those features to be expunged. If it is, as its friends contend, merely an association to promote charity and social intercourse, it has no occasion for such obnoxious oaths, of a character so different from the real objects of the institution. Why such horrid penalties to enforce the practice of such duties, and to effect such objects?

The committee cannot believe, that the rights of any citizen would be abridged, by forbidding him to put himself under such obligations, or to partake in rites, directly calculated to corrupt the public morals. We have not only a right to prohibit crime, but to prevent men from binding themselves to its commission.

The committee believe, that the institution of freemasonry owes its dangerous character to its obligations, which are imposed, as they are informed, upon noviciates, without making known to them their nature. Destitute of their sanctions, and the bond of union they produce, (the sure consequence of the barbarous penalties that are interwoven into their texture,) it would lose its mischievous tendency, and be completely shorn of its locks. Its boasted cement, which owes its influence to one of the strongest, though not the noblest, passions of the human heart, would lose its power; and the mighty edifice that affects to defy the "world in arms," would fall by its own weight. If freemasons are tenacious of their ornaments, badges, and vestments, let them continue to use them, and to display them in public, if it will afford them any amusement or pleasure. But certainly it is asking too much of this community, to require us to tolerate them in the use of oaths which tend directly to sap the foundations of our free institutions, and to subvert the citadel of liberty.

The committee believe that the passage of a law, prohibiting the administration of extra-judicial oaths, would produce many salutary results, disconnected with the masonic institution. The committee who, at the last session, reported the bill to prevent the administration of such oaths, say, with great force and justice, that "the frequent, unauthorised, and irreverent administration of oaths, has a powerful influence to destroy that religious sensibility to their nature, and that scrupulous and conscientious regard to all their requirements, which alone entitle them to confidence. Great and enlightened men have, with one accord, condemned the multiplication of oaths, with or without the sanction of law, as immoral and impolitic." If such remarks are oorrect with respect to oaths administered in the usual form, what shall we say of those presented to the consideration of the house, and which are said to be taken under circumstances of peculiar degradation? It must be perfectly obvious to every one, who will make himself acquainted with their nature and provisions, that they must frequently put it in the power of men, desperate in principle and depraved in morals, to exercise a commanding influence over men of pure principles and upright intentions; that not unfrequently the virtuous citizen finds his known duties clashing with his masonic obligations. Cases must frequently occur which require a conscientious individual, either to disregard an oath imposed by the authority of his country, or one he has taken in a masonic assembly. Cases so distressing and embarrassing should always be prevented if practicable, as they serve to ensnare the conscience, to blunt the moral sense, and to weaken the security which is sought to be obtained by requiring the confirmation of an oath.

The committee forbear to enlarge upon the ease with which an institution, constituted as freemasonry is, might affect our elections and keep its influence out of sight. The citizens of the western counties, when their attention was called to the subject, by the strange transactions which took place amongst them, were surprised to find that nearly every high judicial and ministerial station, in that section of the state, was filled by members of the order. In fact they almost literally filled "every department of the government." It should also be remembered, that one of its votaries has asserted, when speaking in the name of his brethren, on a public anniversary, (and whose boastings, not altogether idle perhaps, have been extensively circulated in masonic newspapers and publications,) that "masonry has the power of co-operating in the desk, in the legislative hall, on the bench, in every gathering of men of business, in every party of pleasure, in every enterprize of government, in every domestic circle, in peace and in war, among its enemies and friends, and in one place as well as another." This idea of masonic influence, it will be seen, accords with that "confidence" to which an able and faithful officer of the government ascribes the untimely fate of the unhappy Morgan.

In directing their inquiries towards that part of the subject which has relation to the legislation that may be necessary in reference to this subject, the committee have deemed two things important: first, to provide for the detection and punishment of those who committed the outrage, and then to guard against the repetition of similar offences. Taking into consideration the circumstances of the case, the committee are persuaded that the act of April 15th, 1828, should be continued in force. The reasons given by Mr. Whiting for the adoption of such a course are, with them, conclusive.

In order that the subject may be fully investigated, it may be necessary to make some provision for those witnesses who are required to attend the courts in distant counties. The frequent delays that have occurred, in the legal proceedings that have been had, have rendered it extremely burthensome on those witnesses who have been called to a considerable distance from their homes. Mr. Moseley recommends that provision should be made for their relief, and the committee, believing that it would promote the ends of justice, by preventing the difficulty of procuring testimony, have incorporated a provision to that effect, into a bill which they ask leave to introduce, to continue in force the act entitled "An act to provide for the employment of counsel for the purposes therein mentioned."

They also ask leave to introduce a bill to prevent the administration of extra judicial oaths.

The subject referred to the committee, being one of first impression and of vast importance, they do not feel fully prepared, at present, to say what legislation may be necessary, in relation to its full development, and the furtherance of justice. They do not, therefore, ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the subject, but wish to be indulged with further time for reflection, on the measures which should be devised for the more effectual investigation of the outrages committed on the person of Morgan, and to provide against the recurrence of events, so alarming in their character, so destructive of the peace of society, and the safety of its members.

[For the Documents accompanying this Report, see Appendix F.]

Mr. Mann, from the committee on claims, to which was referred the petition of Jonathan Wheat, praying legislative relief in relation to certain lands leased to him by the state, and the report of the surveyor-general on the said petition, asked for leave to report by bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Mann, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Jonathan Wheat;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Dyckman, from the select committee to which were referred the petitions of several societies of the city of New-York, on the subject of the state hospital money, reported:

That it appears the object of the petitioners is to obtain redress for what they term a grievance, resulting from the operation of a law of this state, which appropriates solely for the use of the house of refuge for juvenile delinquents in the city of New-York, whatever surplus money shall remain in the hands of the commissioners of health in that city, from the fund created by the exaction of what is termed state hospital money.

It appears from the Journals of the Assembly for the year 1828, that a petition of a similar nature was presented to the late legislature; and by a report made by the committee to which that petition was referred, (and which committee was composed of the delegation from the city of New-York,) it is set forth, that the members of the committee were "unanimously of the opinion "that there is much reason and justice in the application of the memorialists, "and that the prayer of the memorial ought to be granted."

In the act to provide against infectious and pestilential diseases, passed in April, 1820, it is directed, that whatever surplus money shall remain in the hands of the commissioners of health, in the city of New-York, after defraying all the expenses incident to the health establishment in that city, should be invested yearly in government stock; and that when such investments should amount to a sufficient sum, in the opinion of the executive of the state, he should direct the stock to be sold, and with the proceeds thereof, cause to be erected at the quarantine establishment, in the county of Richmond, substantial stone or brick hospitals, in lieu of the then wooden ones at that place.

It does not appear from the law of 1820, that the surplus of the hospital fund collected in the port of New-York, was intended by the legislature to be applied for any other purpose, than to the erection of permanent stone or brick buildings at the quarantine establishment in the county of Richmond; neither does it by any means appear from that law, that such fund was intended for the support of a house of refuge for juvenile delinquents. It appears, however, from the returns made to this house by the comptroller, that forty-three thousand dollars of this fund has been already appropriated to the support of that institution, and that a large sum has likewise been expended in the erection of permanent, and the repairing of other public buildings at Staten-Island; but how much, the committee are unable precisely to state. It would appear, however, that more than forty-two thousand dollars has been expended for this purpose; and that, excepting some of those buildings which are now in an unfinished state, and which the public good requires should be completed, the expenditures which will be required to be made for the public buildings at the quarantine establishment in the county of Richmond, will be but of small amount.

It would appear from information in possession of the committee, that the receipts of the house of refuge have, for the past year, been insufficient to meet the current expenses of that institution. And here the committee would beg leave to remark, that an institution so excellent in its nature as the house of refuge, and one, the founding of which would shed additional lustre upon the character of a Howard, should not be left to any contingency whatever for its support. The committee view this institution as forming an important part of the penitentiary system of this state, and one which should be taken immediately under the protection of the state, and ample means provided for its support.

But while the committee are thus rendering the just tribute of praise to the house of refuge, and to the humane intentions of those benevolent individuals who were its founders, they cannot forget the aged, infirm and indigent seaman, who has too long been neglected by that country to whose prosperity he has so largely contributed; whose honor he has so nobly defended, and by whose fearless and daring intrepidity, during the late war between this country and Great Britain, was given the first check to that once proud mistress of the ocean.

No class of the community are more justly entitled to our commisseration and support, than the care-worn and houseless sailor; who, from the nature of his vocation, having been constantly exposed to hardships and dangers, and from his generous and too confiding disposition, when old age and decripitude shall have driven him from that element which was once the scene of his active exertions, is often overtaken, in the downhill of life, by poverty and all its attendant evils, and compelled to seek from the hand of private charity, that relief which should be provided him by his country.

The committee are of the opinion, that the founding of an institution as an asylum for aged, indigent and infirm seamen, upon a plan similar to those noble institutions of a like nature in Great Britain, which have done so much towards fostering that spirit of naval supremacy and maritime glory, for which that country was once so renowned, would be consummating those desires and expectations which have been so long cherished by the nautical inhabitants of the greatest commercial city on the western continent, and would serve as a lasting monument of the wisdom and intelligence of this legislature.

To provide for this, and for the permanent support of the house of refuge for juvenile delinquents in the city of New-York, the committee have prepared a bill, and directed their chairman to ask for leave to introduce the same.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Dyckman, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to provide for the support of aged and indigent seamen, and the house of refuge for juvenile delinquents in the city of New-York;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Ordered, That the usual number of copies of the said bill and report be printed for the use of the legislature.

Mr. Noble, from the select committee to which was referred the amendments of the Senate to the bill entitled "An act further to extend the time for the payment of monies loaned by the commissioners of loans and loan-officers, to citizens of this state," reported, that they have examined the amendments to the said bill, and recommend that this house do concur in the same, except the second section, to which amendment the committee recommend that the house do not concur.

Ordered, That the said report and bill do lie upon the table.

On motion of Mr. Myers,

Resolved, That the comptroller be requested to report to this house, any information in his possession or power, as to what would be the effect on the revenue of the state, should a superintendent of auctions be appointed for the city of New-York.

In pursuance of previous notice, Mr. T. L. Smith asked for and obtained leave to bring in a bill entitled "An act relative to general elections;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

On motion of Mr. Mann,

Ordered, That the committee on claims be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Charles Baker, praying for damages occasioned by a breach in the Champlain canal; and that the same be referred to the canal board.

A message from the Senate, delivered by their clerk, with the bill and a copy of the resolution therein mentioned, was read, informing that they have rejected the bill entitled "An act to confirm a conveyance made by the administrators of Henry I. Moore to John Ridley."

Mr. W. Hall, from the committee on engrossed bills, reported, that they have examined the engrossed amendments to the engrossed bill from the Senate, entitled "An act concerning the proof and acknowledgment of deeds," and find the same correctly engrossed.

The said engrossed bill from the Senate, entitled "An act concerning the proof and acknowledgment of deeds," with the engrossed amendments, was read the third time.

Resolved, That the bill and amendments do pass.

Ordered, That the clerk deliver the said bill and amendments to the Senate, and inform them that this house have passed the same, with the amendments therewith delivered.

The petition of sundry inhabitants of the county of Delaware, praying for the incorporation of a bank, to be located at Delhi, was read, and referred to the committee on the incorporation and alteration of the charters of banking and insurance companies.

The petition of the trustees of the "German Reformed Sanctity Church," in the town of Germantown in the county of Columbia, and others, praying for the passage of a law to authorise them to sell certain real estate belonging to said church, was read, and referred to a select committee, consisting of Mr. P. Van Beuren, Mr. Holdridge and Mr. H. W. Livingston.

The petition of Oliver S. Vanderheyden, praying legislative relief in relation to a lot of land purchased by him in the town of Granby in the county of Oswego, and which has escheated to the people of this state, was read, and referred to the committee on public lands.

The memorial of Justus Dobbin, of the county of Ontario, praying to be allowed a share of the bounty offered to any person who shall prosecute to judgment the kidnappers of William Morgan, was read, and referred to the select committee on that subject, of which Mr. Hazeltine is chairman.

The petition of sundry master builders and others of the city of New-York, praying for the passage of a law, giving them a lien on buildings erected by them, for labor and materials furnished, was read, and referred to the select committee on that subject, of which Mr. Burt is chairman.

The petition of sundry inhabitants of the county of Orange, and the president of the Great Island turnpike road company, praying for the passage of a law to authorise the said company to abandon a part of their road, was read, and referred to the committee on the establishment and improvement of roads and bridges, and the incorporation of turnpike companies.

The petition of David Woods and others, inhabitants of the town of Granville in the county of Washington, praying for the incorporation of a bank, to be located at Whitehall, was read, and referred to the committee on the incorporation and alteration of the charters of banking and insurance companies.

Mr. Hubbard, from the committee on the establishment and improvement of roads and bridges, and the incorporation of turnpike companies, on the petition of sundry inhabitants of the town of Otego, praying for an alteration of a certain road in said town, asked leave to report by bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Hubbard, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to authorise the commissioners of highways of the town of Otego to alter a road;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

A communication from the canal board, was read, in the words following, to wit:

The canal board, to whom the Hon. the Assembly have referred the petition of Benjamin Cook, respectfully report:

That the petitioner represents that his lands were overflowed, and his crops destroyed, by the water which was discharged from the Erie canal, by persons who cut away the banks, for the purpose of preventing breaches during the freshets of the last summer; whereby he has sustained damages to the amount of three hundred dollars; and he prays the legislature to grant him relief. The facts set forth by the petitioner are supported by his own oath, and by the affidavits of several other persons.

The existing law makes provision for the payment of damages in two cases only; to wit, where lands, waters or streams, are appropriated by the canal commissioners to the public use; and where land has been occupied by them for temporary purposes, or on which they may have entered for the purpose of obtaining materials for repairs.

The claim of the petitioner does not fall within either class of these cases; and it is believed that there is no authority given the canal commissioners to make compensation for injuries of this kind, arising from their acts, or the acts of any superintendent or other person employed on the canals. It appears to this board reasonable and proper that compensation should be made to the petitioner, and that some general legislative provision for assessment and payment should be made to embrace this and similar cases of damages.

Ordered, That the said communication be referred to the committee on canals and internal improvements.

A communication from the attorney-general, was read in the words following, to wit:

The attorney-general, in obedience to the resolution of the Assembly, referring to him the petition and documents of Timothy Tallman, to report "the nature and kind of relief (if any,) which, in his opinion, ought to be granted to the petitioner," respectfully reports:

That the petitioner represents that injustice has been done him in the sale by the state of lots number 151 and 222, in the late Oneida reservation, in which he was interested. In April, 1824, an act was passed for his relief, (laws of 1824, page 140,) which, after reciting that lot number 151 had been sold "through mistake or misapprehension," provided that the sum of four hundred and forty-three dollars, which the petitioner had paid towards the purchase money of the lot, with the interest and taxes he had paid on the same account, should be refunded; and the petitioner now alleges, that complete justice has not been done him in relation to that lot, inasmuch as interest was not allowed on the sums paid for taxes, nor the amount he had paid for assessments to labor on the highway. In the Assembly journal for 1824, page 656, will be found the report of the commissioners of the land-office upon this claim; and at page 711 of the same journal, will be found the report of the committee of claims upon the same subject, from which report, in connection with the act which was thereupon passed, it will be seen, that the lot in question was sold, and the petitioner's title defeated, without any default on his part; and in such a case, it is but just and equitable that a full indemnity should be awarded to the petitioner; and this object may be attained, by paying him the fair value of the land at the time of sale, with interest thereon, after deducting any amount that may have been due the state on account of the purchase money for the lot, and also deducting the amount that has been paid to the petitioner under the existing act for his relief.

Considering that the kind of relief above suggested involves a review of the decision of the legislature upon this subject, in 1824, the attorney-general would have avoided this expression of his opinion, had it not been plainly called for by the resolution of the Assembly.

By a recurrence to the reports already mentioned, in connection with the other papers of the petitioner, it will be seen that he complains of the sale of his part of lot number 222, upon several grounds.

First. That a fraud was committed by some person unknown, by means of which his part of the lot was charged with too great an amount of the purchase money; and that in this way he appeared to have been in arrear in his payments, contrary to the truth of the case.

Secondly. That a fraud was committed by the purchaser or purchasers upon the sale, by making false representations, and entering into an agreement which prevented a fair competition among the bidders.

Thirdly. That on account of a difficulty between him and Wilcox, (who owned half the lot,) about their payments, the petitioner was advised by the then attorney-general to make no further payments on his half, until the matters should be adjusted; and that a memorandum was then made in pencil upon the petitioner's account, in the treasurer's books, that his half of the lot was not to be sold; but that in consequence of a change in the public officers, his land was unexpectedly and improperly sold.

And lastly. That his land was sold through the improper conduct of one or more of the clerks in the office of the comproller.

The act for the relief of the petitioner, above referred to, proceeding upon the second of the above grounds, made it the duty of the attorney-general to take such measures, either at law or in equity, to vacate the sale of lot 222, as he might deem proper, "in case it should appear to him that such sale was procured by the fraud or contrivance of the person or persons purchasing the same of the state."

No resort has been had to the remedy prescribed by this act; and the petitioner has undoubtedly given the true reason for the omission. He states that he has been informed by the [then] attorney-general, that he had not taken any measures, either at law or in equity, to vacate the said sale, and that his reason for omitting to do so was, that although he was satisfied the sale was procured by fraud and misrepresentation, yet he was not fully satisfied that it was procured by the fraud or contrivance of the person or persons who actually purchased the same of the state.

From a view of the whole case, it appears to be highly probable, that the petitioner had, in fact, made all the payments of interest that were justly chargeable to his half of the lot, and that his land was sold in his absence from the state, and without his knowledge, when he had reason to believe he was in no danger of losing his property; and without saying any thing of the several allegations of fraudulent conduct on the part of the purchasers, and others, it is a case of great hardship upon the petitioner, and one that addresses itself with some force to the legislature, for equitable relief, either by paying the value of the land at the time of sale, or refunding the money the petitioner had paid towards his part of the lot.

All of which is respectfully submitted,

GREENE C. BRONSON, Attorney-General.

Feb. 17*th*, 1829.

Ordered, That the said communication and the petition be referred to the committee on claims.

A communication from Joseph D. Selden and David Woods, canal appraisers, was read in the words following, to wit:

We, Joseph D. Selden and David Woods, the canal appraisers, to whom the petition of William A. Moore and others was referred, report:

That in the summer and fall of the year 1825, the appraisers personally examined the premises of the petitioners, on which the alleged damages by the Champlain canal have been done. That in the latter part of the fall of 1825, and in the succeeding winter, we, together with Samuel Young, Esquire, then one of the acting canal commissioners, did attend at convenient places along that part of the said canal which passes through the premises of the petitioners, alleged to have been so injured, and did then examine such witnesses in relation to those damages as the said petitioners thought proper to present. That afterwards, in that winter, we, the said appraisers, together with the said Samuel Young, Esquire, did meet and pass upon, and decide upon these claims.

By those decisions it is to be inferred from the petition, that the petitioners allege that injustice has been done to them. It is true, as the petitioners state, that various opinions have existed in relation to the advantages and disadvantages in the construction and operation of the said canal, to those persons who live in its vicinity; and it is not improbable but that we may have done injustice to the petitioners, in passing on and deciding their said claims.

We are satisfied, that in that section of country, an opinion very generally prevails, not only among those immediately interested in the lands through which the canal passes, but among others, that the advantages which had been anticipated by the said canal had not been, and probably never would be realized; but on this subject, we forbear to express an opinion, because, should the legislature think proper to interfere, and direct or authorize a re-assessment, in the cases of the petitioners, the appraisers would ultimately be called upon to decide those cases; hence the propriety of the appraisers remaining uncommitted, and their minds left free and unbiassed on that subject; and such an opinion, we think, the petitioners cannot reasonable expect from the appraisers, inasmuch as one subject of their complaint is, that the mind of one of the members of the board of appraisers, in deciding on those claims, was, as they allege, not free and unbiassed.

In estimating the damages in the cases of the petitioners, the appraisers did not take into that estimate the expense of making and keeping in repair the fences necessary to be maintained along the margin of the canal, and the reason was, that we supposed those fences would be kept up and maintained by the state, and that probably, some arrangement might ultimately be made with the petitioners in relation to those fences, by which the state would commute, and which might be equally beneficial to the petitioners, and advantageous to the state.

All which is respectfully submitted, this 18th day of February, 1829.

JOSEPH D. SELDEN,
DAVID WOODS.

Ordered, That the said communication be referred to the committee on claims.

The petition of Polly Hendrick, Rhoda Hendrick and Zebulon Everet, Indians of the Stockbridge tribe, praying for legislative relief, was read, and referred to the committee on Indian affairs.

The petition of sundry inhabitants of the towns of Auburn, Sennet and Brutus, in the county of Cayuga, praying for the passage of a law appointing commissioners to lay out a road from the village of Auburn in the county of Cayuga, to the village of Weedsport in said county, was read, and referred to the committee on the establishment and improvement of roads and bridges, and the incorporation of turnpike companies.

The petition of Alexander Sleight, an alien, praying for the passage of a law authorising him to purchase, take, hold, and convey real estate within this state, was read, and referred to the committee on the petitions of aliens.

Four several petitions from sundry inhabitants of the towns of Bath, Jersey and Hornby, praying for the repeal of an act relative to Mud creek in the county of Steuben, were read, and referred to the committee on the establishment and improvement of roads and bridges, and the incorporation of turnpike companies.

The petition of sundry inhabitants of the county of Oswego, praying for the passage of an act appointing commissioners to establish a central location for the county buildings in said county, was read, and referred to the committee on the erection and division of towns and counties.

The petition of the trustees of the village of Rochester, praying for the passage of a law to incorporate the city of Rochester, was read, and referred to the committee on the incorporation of cities and villages.

The petition of the trustees of the village of Syracuse, praying for the passage of a law to alter the act incorporating said village, was read, and referred to the committee on the incorporation of cities and villages.

Mr. Burt, from the committee on the establishment and improvement of roads and bridges, and the incorporation of turnpike companies, to which was referred the petition of the Rensselaer bridge company, reported:

That this company was incorporated in 1808, to erect and maintain a toll bridge across the Kinderhook creek, in the town of Nassau, in the county of Rensselaer. Their charter also allows them the privilege of exercising the control over about two miles of road, attached to and included as the property of the said company. Application is made to the present legislature for an extension of their charter; and they state, as their principal reason, that the receipts from their original investment, together with the re-building and other necessary repairs, have not as yet produced an equivalent which compensates them for their capital employed.

The books of the company do not furnish to the committee a very accurate statement of the concerns, during the time this gate has been placed on the bridge; but so far as they have been managed by the present proprietor, they appear to be perfectly plain and intelligible. Connected with his statements, there would be a deficiency in the avails of the corporation.

An objection is made to the renewal of this charter, by the proprietors of Columbia and Rensselaer turnpike company, on the ground that at the expiration of the Rensselaer bridge company's charter, they will take the same, together with their road, and keep them in repair, free from any expense to the public, which would relieve the traveller from the payment of tolls at the present gate, and that this course will increase the travel on their road, as to justify them in agreeing to adopt it.

The question then is, whether the Rensselaer bridge company shall be permitted to perpetuate a tax upon community any longer than their original charter, contemplated. It appears to have been considered as an act of justice, that whenever the receipts, under the old charters, fall short of a fair compensation, it should be continued to the original applicants. In the present case, the applicants have made a majority of the committee believe that the present is one of the cases under that rule, and that their charter should be continued for ten years, to make up such deficiency; and the committee have directed their chairman to prepare a bill and ask leave to introduce the same.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Burt, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to extend the charter of the Rensselaer bridge company;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Chandler, from the committee on the erection and division of towns and counties, on the petition of sundry inhabitants of the town of Broome in the county of Schoharie, and Durham in the county of Greene, praying for a division of those towns, reported:

That as it appears requisite notices have not been given to erect a new town from parts of the town of Durham in the county of Greene, and the town of Broome in the county of Schoharie, the committee recommend that the petitioners have leave to withdraw their petition, and submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the petitioners have leave to withdraw their petition.

Mr. Speaker put the question whether the house would agree to the said resolution, and it was determined in the affirmative.

Mr. Chandler, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to straighten the line between the counties of Erie and Genesee;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Al Burtis, from the committee on the incorporation of charitable and religious societies, reported:

That they have had the petition of the consistories of the Dutch reformed churches in the towns of Rochester and Wawarsing under consideration, and think the prayer of the petitioners reasonable, and should be granted; they have accordingly prepared a bill, and ask leave to introduce the same.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Al Burtis, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act confirming the division of a lot of land owned by the Dutch reformed churches in the towns of Rochester and Wawarsing, and to enable the consistory of Wawarsing to sell their portion of said lot of land;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

On motion of Mr. Al Burtis,

On motion of Mr. Dean,

I have the honor to be,
Your most obedient humble servant,

Resolved, That the prayer of the petitioner ought not to be granted.

Mr. Savage made a motion that the house should agree to amend the said report, by inserting immediately preceding the said resolution, a resolution in the words following, to wit:

Resolved, (as the sense of this house,) That they have reason to believe that fraud or corruption has been practised upon the ballot box for elector and member of congress, at the late election in the town of Greenfield, in the county of Saratoga; but they have not conclusive evidence that such fraud or corruption was practised by the consent or with the knowledge of the board of inspectors of said town, or that any fraud was practised upon the assembly box.

Mr. Mann, from the select committee to which was committed the bill entitled "An act to alter the time of holding town-meetings in the towns of Danube and Starks in the county of Herkimer," reported, that the committee had gone through the said bill, made an amendment thereto, and agreed to the same; which he was directed to report to the house, and he read the report in his place, and delivered the same in at the table, where it was again read, and agreed to by the house.

A communication from the canal commissioners, was read, in the words following, to wit:

The canal commissioners, to whom was referred by the honorable the Assembly the petition of James and John Lidgerwood, praying for an allowance on their contract for the construction of locks, report:

That the petitioners did, as they state, enter into a contract with Samuel Young, then acting canal commissioner, to construct four locks above the Cohoes falls on the Erie canal, which said four locks embraced thirty-three feet of lockage, for which they were to be paid one thousand dollars per foot lift; that they were authorized by the said acting commissioner to procure the water lime for said locks, either from the west, or from the Bald mountain in Washington county; that they finished the locks in the year 1823, and received, on the 3d of October in that year, that last payment on their contract, which in the whole amounted to $33.000; that there were some doubts at the time, whether the work was done in the best manner—some of the mitre-cills were found not to be well secured, and had to be replaced after the contract was accepted; that the petitioners afterwards made several applications to the board of canal commissioners for an extra allowance on their contract, which they finally obtained in 1825, a majority of the said board (the above named acting commissioner dissenting,) awarding to the petitioners the sum of three thousand three hundred dollars, in addition to the contract price which had previously been paid; that the said extra allowance was paid to them, and a receipt taken as follows:

(Copy.)

Rec'd. of Samnel Young, canal commissioner, thirty-three hundred dollars, in full on the contract for locks of James Lidgerwood and myself on the canal, for which I have signed duplicate receipts. Dated 29th June, 1825.

$3,300. (Signed.)

JOHN LIDGERWOOD.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

In behalf of the Canal Commissioners,

S. YOUNG.

Feb. 17*th*, 1829.

Ordered, That the said communication be referred to the committee on claims.

A communication from the canal commissioners was read, in the words following, to wit:

The canal commissioners, to whom was referred by the honorable the Assembly the petition of Isaac Vail, report:

That the said petitioner was the contractor on section four, of the improvement of the Champlain canal, which section was finished by the petitioner in January, 1827. The petitioner was paid the contract price on his job; but not being indemnified by the contract price, for the money he had expended on the job, he petitioned the legislature in Feb. 1827, for a further allowance on his contract. This petition was referred by the legislature to the canal commissioners, and their report thereon will be found in the Assembly journal of 1827, page 742. The petitioner not obtaining relief from the legislature, applied, in the session of 1828, to the canal board, for relief. The canal board, after hearing the testimony of the engineer, awarded to the petitioner the sum of $800, which was paid to him.

The canal board, in making this allowance to the petitioner were not authorized by the law to award any thing for the "unfavorable terms of the contract;" and the alleged loss of the petitioner, for which he is not yet indemnified, probably arose from this cause.

It is not believed that the canal board have power to make any further allowance to the petitioner; and his only remedy, if he has any, for his alleged loss, is with the legislature.

All which is respectfully submitted,

S. YOUNG,
HENRY SEYMOUR,
WILLIAM C. BOUCK.

Feb. 18*th*, 1829.

A message from the Senate, delivered by their clerk, with the bill and amendments therein mentioned, was read, informing that they have passed the bill entitled "An act to divide the town of Kirkland in the county of Oneida," with the amendments therewith delivered.

That this is an application for an act of incorporation, and for the appropriation of the poor fund of the town, for the support of an academy.

The petitioners state, that they have, at an expense of from ten to twelve hundred dollars, erected an academy upon a lot of ground given for that purpose, by the late Oliver Smith; that a school was put in operation in November, 1827, where about eighty-five scholars have been instructed in the higher branches of education; that many difficulties have been experienced for the want of an act of incorporation.

They further state, that the supervisors of the county of Oneida have recently resolved to build a county poor-house, and to abolish the distinction between town and county poor; that the town of Remsen has, by rigid economy, and the liberal donations of individuals, accumulated a poor fund to the amount of more than one thousand dollars, and they ask that a provision may be inserted in the act, appropriating this fund for the benefit of their academy.

Among the papers referred to the committee, relating to this subject, there is a remonstrance of the trustees of Steuben academy, in the same county, against the prayer of the petition.

They state, that their academy was incorporated in the year 1826, and is situated within four miles of Remsen; that the population in that section of the country is thin; that one academy is amply sufficient to afford the means of education to that community, and that two cannot be sustained. They protest, in strong terms, against the justice and propriety of passing an act which would operate most injuriously upon the prosperity of an institution already incorporated, and which was established at great expense by the liberality and enterprise of a few individuals, for the benefit of that section of the country. The facts stated in the remonstrance are not disputed, and are believed to be conclusive against the application.

The poor fund referred to in the petition, belongs to the town. There has been no satisfactory evidence before the committee, that a majority of the inhabitants are in favor of appropriating it in the manner proposed. The committee think it would be unwise for the legislature to assume the disposal of this fund, without a vote of the town; and as they have understood that a bill would be introduced authorising the several towns in that county, at their annual town-meetings, to dispose of their poor funds, they have directed their chairman to submit the following resolution.

Resolved, That the petitioners have leave to withdraw their petition.

Ordered, That the said report and resolution be laid upon the table.

Mr. Arnold, from the committee on the militia, to which was referred the petition of the field officers of the 13th regiment of the New-York state artillery, praying for the passage of a law authorising a regimental court-martial, asked for leave to report by bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Arnold, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act authorising the commandant of the thirteenth regiment of artillery to constitute and appoint a regimental court-martial, for certain purposes;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

In pursuance of previous notice, Mr. Brown asked for and obtained leave to bring in a bill entitled "An act authorising the town of Mount-Pleasant in the county of Westchester, to sell its town poor-house and farm;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

The house then proceeded to the consideration of the report of the committee of the whole, on the bill entitled "An act authorising a loan to John I. Van Alen and his associates;" the said report being that the committee had gone through the said bill, made an amendment thereto, and agreed to the same.

Mr. Speaker put the question whether the house would agree with the committee of the whole in their said report, and it was determined in the affirmative.

Ordered, That the bill be engrossed.

Mr. W. Hall, from the committee on engrossed bills, reported, that they have examined the engrossed bill entitled "An act to alter the time of holding town-meetings in the towns of Danube and Starks in the county of Herkimer," and find the said bill correctly engrossed.

The said engrossed bill, entitled "An act to alter the time of holding town-meetings in the towns of Danube and Starks in the county of Herkimer," was read the third time.

Resolved, That the bill do pass.

Ordered, That the clerk deliver the said bill to the Senate, and request their concurrence in the same.

The house then again resolved itself into a committee of the whole, on the bill entitled "An act authorising the construction of the Chenango canal;" and after some time spent thereon, Mr. Speaker resumed the chair, and Mr. J. Van Beuren, from the said committee, reported progress, and asked for and obtained leave to sit again.

The house then resolved itself into a committee of the whole, on the bill entitled "An act to create a fund for the benefit of the creditors of certain monied corporations, and for other purposes;" and after some time spent thereon, Mr. Speaker resumed the chair, and Mr. Seeley, from the said committee, reported progress, and asked for and obtained leave to sit again.

The house then resolved itself into a committee of the whole, on the bill entitled "An act for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of John Thompson deceased;" and after some time spent thereon, Mr. Speaker resumed the chair, and Mr. Partridge, from the said committee, reported progress, and asked for and obtained leave to sit again.

The house then resolved itself into a committee of the whole, on the engrossed bill from the Senate, entitled "An act authorising David Reeve to erect a dock in the town of Flushing;" and after some time spent thereon, Mr. Speaker resumed the chair, and Mr. Spier, from the said committee, reported, that the committee had gone through the said bill, and agreed to the same without amendment; which he was directed to report to the house, and he read the report in his place, and delivered the same in at the table, where it was again read and agreed to by the house, and the bill ordered to a third reading.

Two several messages from the Senate, delivered by their clerk, with the bills and amendments therein mentioned, were read, informing that they have passed the bill entitled "An act to alter the time of holding town-meetings in the towns of Danube and Starks in the county of Herkimer," and the bill entitled "An act for the relief of Cornelius Higgins," with the amendments to the said bills therewith delivered.

The said bills and amendments were read; and the amendments having been again read, were severally concurred in by the house, and the bills amended accordingly.

Ordered, That the clerk deliver the said bills and amendments to the Senate, and inform them that this house have concurred with them in their amendments to the said bills, and have amended the same accordingly.

Mr. Ruggles, from the committee on the militia, to which was referred the petition of sundry general and field officers of infantry, in the city of New-York, praying for the passage of an act, amendatory of the law relating to the militia in the city and county of New-York, so as to require the several presidents of the several brigade courts martial to pay over the net proceeds of fines received by them to a board of officers, composed of the several commandants of divisions and brigades, or to a treasurer, to be appointed by them, within the time fixed by law for such payment, to be by the said board distributed, in equal division, among the several commandants of regiments, to be by them employed in defraying the usual expenses of printing, music, &c. and the balance to be accounted for to the said board; or requiring the said board to pay out of the said fund such expenses as may be certified to be correct by the commandants of regiments, and distributing the balance among newly organized regiments, reported:

That the committee, upon mature consideration, are opposed to the proposed alteration of the existing law, and amongst others, for the following reasons. The foundation of the system of public defence is a rigid and accurate enrolment of persons subject to military duty; that without great strictness in the performance of this part of the duty of militia officers, the physical strength of the state cannot be correctly ascertained, and the organization of the militia would necessarily be imperfect.

As an inducement to the strict and correct performance of this duty, the officers of the corps of infantry are made to depend for remuneration for expenditures for colors, printing, music, &c. upon the penalties which shall be collected for delinquencies. If, therefore, there should be a consolidation of military fines, this duty might be carelessly and inadequately performed.

Brigades of infantry usually consist of three or four regiments, forming distinct military corps, relying upon the prompt performance of the duty of their respective officers and their own economy, to render their respective corps respectable by supplying them with the usual embellishments of war, such as elegant standards, good martial music, &c. Take from them these inducements, by making a general fund, and you destroy the esprit de corps, and put an end to emulation among the different brigades.

Besides the tendency of such a law to destroy the efficiency and discipline of the militia, its operation might be unjust and inequitable. In some brigades, enrolments might be altogether omitted, or the commandants might not order courts martial within the time prescribed by law: such brigades would, consequently, contribute no funds. Thus the corps which had strictly performed their duty, would be compelled to supply the deficiencies occasioned by the carelessness and neglect of duty of the officers of other corps.

Experience has sufficiently demonstrated the impolicy of consolidating the funds of the different military corps. Some years since, the legislature of this state enacted a law, directing the payment of all moneys collected for military fines into the treasury of the state, and also providing that requisitions be made on it, for necessary expenses. The result was, that the state was brought considerably in debt, and the system abandoned.

The committee would, therefore, recommend to the house the adoption of the following resolution.

Resolved, That the prayer of the petitioners ought not to be granted.

Thereupon,

Mr. Speaker put the question whether the house would agree to the said resolution, and it was determined in the affirmative.

Mr. Burt, from the select committee to which was referred the several petitions from different parts of this state, in relation to the passage of a law allowing builders of houses to have a lien on the same for payment of their contracts, reported:

That in presenting to the consideration of the legislature this report, the committee wish to be understood that they are governed by what they believe justice demands. The subject which the petitioners are appealing to their constituted authorities for relief, is one of great interest to a most respectable class of our citizens—the mechanic who desires to reap the fruits of his industry, by being secured in his contracts, which he makes with those that are under the necessity of resorting to him as an artist, to provide for themselves the comforts of a fine house, and the necessary buildings to complete an establishment for the conveniences of families.

This is a subject which has been agitated in the community for many years, and the journals shew that almost every year, the attention of previous legislatures has been called to notice the merits of similar applications; more frequently, however, of a local nature, which is the principal reason, the committee believe, that relief has not been granted.

A law, if necessary, should be general; because if found to afford security in our cities, the same reason would apply to villages, and finally to all parts of the state, in a greater or less degree. All seem to admit the justice of affording protection to the industrious mechanic, and that a law should receive the sanction of the present legislature, which would effect that object. It is believed by the committee, that a law can be so framed, as to guard the rights of all parties, where a disposition is shown that it is the intention of the parties to deal justly; and those of a contrary character, must expect that they will be obliged to abide the consequences and justice inflicted, by reason of their misrepresentations, made to induce the mechanic to undertake a job of work, and never intending to pay him for his labor.

The committee are informed, that some of our sister states have also felt the evils of which our citizens complain, and have already, by enactment, afforded that security—that the laborer was worthy of his hire, and should not be compelled to have his hard earnings stripped from him by some fraudulent transfer. And are the people of the state of New-York more free from artful and designing men, than those of other states? Probably not. Then why should not she feel a disposition to afford that security which will stimulate the mechanic to the faithful performance and fulfilment of his contracts?

It may be said that this is an alteration from a long established custom in relation to contracts, and that the person making the same should act with caution, and not be deceived. But the answer to this may be easily given. It is very improbable, when a person, and perhaps reputed to be wealthy, who wishes to make contracts, that our common mechanic can say to this person, you must give me security, or I will not undertake. What would be the reply? Why, you shall not have this job. Rather than lose the prospect of providing for himself and family, he will take the risk; and perhaps before his contract is completed, his all has been expended, and the property is in the hands of some third person, who will not recognize his claim as due from him, but turn him off with saying, you must collect your demand from the person with whom you made your contract.

Therefore, because this law, if passed, will be an infringement of an old established custom, cannot, as the committee believe, be a sufficient reason that it should always remain so. Many of our tradesmen have a lien upon the articles manufactured by them, while in possession; which is an adoption of the principle which is considered by the community, as a provision highly beneficial to those who might otherwise be imposed upon.

The committee may also remind the house of the protection your laws has afforded to the landlord. And are the wealthy, and many times oppressive landlords, more entitled to protection than the mechanic, who, with his labor and ingenuity, does so much towards producing the comforts of life? Who is it, in case of necessity, you are obliged to resort to for the the defence of your rights? Is it not the mechanic? Then why not give him that security you have already by enactment granted the landlord?

It may then be asked with some appearance of reason. in what consists the difference which is so visible in the characters of our citizens? The answer is plain and easy. It consists in the feelings of the heart—in that noble sentiment of independence, which tells the lowest citizen of a free state, that he is a man, and as such, has an equal claim to the protection of the laws with the proudest and most wealthy of his countrymen.

Deprive him of this, and his whole nature alters. It matters little by what means the change is produced; whether by the hand of power or by the pressure of poverty and distress; the effect in either case will be similar.

Behold the man whose arm alone is sufficient to procure him every necessary of life; with what a bold and elevated countenance he looks around him. The smile of content sits light upon his brow: his smile is the characteristic of freedom: it denotes the feelings of a heart which can reply with fearless dignity to the mightiest of mankind, I am like yourself.

Imagine to yourself a circle of a family, whose father has been entrapped in consequence of being misled by the arts of some intriguing speculator, who wishes to reap the fruits of another's industry, and say, if these things do exist. And it is fair to presume they do: otherwise you would not find your citizens praying for relief.

The committee will ask the attention of the legislature, for their consideration, in relation to the usefulness of this portion of our community, in comparison with the whole mass, and say, if they should not receive that protection from this government, to which their standing in society entitles them.

By our institutions, all claim equal rights, privileges and protection; and certainly no one is found to be more useful than the mechanic whom the present bill proposes to relieve. The committee might adduce many more reasons in favor of this application; but presume, to this enlightened legislature, it would be wholly unnecessary.

They have therefore prepared a bill, and directed their chairman to ask leave to introduce the same.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Burt, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act securing to mechanics, payment of their contracts for erecting houses and other buildings;" which was read the first time. and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Brinkerhoff, from the select committee to which was referred the engrossed bill from the Senate, entitled "An act to incorporate the Sodus canal company," reported, that they have examined the said bill, prepared sundry amendments thereto. and with the said amendments, see no reason why the same should not become a law.

Ordered, That the said bill and amendments be committed to a committee of the whole house.

On motion of Mr. J. M'Donald,

Ordered, That the report of the canal commissioners on the petition of Isaac Vail, be referred to the committee on claims.

Ordered, That the bill entitled "An act further to extend the time for the payment of moneys loaned by the commissioners of loans and loan-officers, to citizens of this state," together with the amendments of the Senate thereto, be committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Burt gave notice that he would, at some future day, ask leave to introduce a bill to repeal the act incorporating the president, directors and company of the Bank of Niagara.

The house then proceeded to the consideration of the resolutions of the Senate of the 19th instant, relative to the printing of communications, reports, and other papers presented to the legislature.

The said resolutions were again read, in the words following, to wit:

Resolved, (if the Assembly concur,) That during the remainder of the present session, all messages from the executive, reports, communications, and other papers presented to either the Senate or Assembly, when the same shall be ordered, shall be printed in octavo form, upon type of pica, to contain not less than 1050 ems upon the page.

Resolved, (if the Assembly concur,) That all bills shall be printed in the present folio form.

Thereupon,

Resolved, That this house concur with the Senate in their said resolutions.

Ordered, That the clerk deliver a copy of the preceding resolution of concurrence to the Senate.

A communication from the canal commissioners was read, in the words following, to wit:

The canal commissioners in answer to the reference of the honorable the Assembly, of the petition of a number of "inhabitants residing at and near the head of the Seneca lake, and others interested in the health of that section of the state, praying that the canal commissioners may be directed to reduce the waters of the Seneca lake to a level with its outlet, between the lake and the reef at Waterloo, or as much lower as may be deemed sufficient to reclaim the marshes": and also in obedience to a resolution of the 12th instant, accompanying said petition, respectfully report:

That the resolution requires them to report, First—"how great a reduction is necessary to bring the waters of Seneca lake, at their natural level, to a level with the outlet, or the body of water between the lake and the reef at Waterloo?"

If by the body of water is meant the outlet about half a mile below the foot of the lake, a reduction of eighteen inches would be required: if the level of the water in the outlet immediately above the Waterloo dam is intended, a reduction of about three feet would be necessary: if the reef on which the Waterloo dam rests is intended, a reduction of about five feet would be required.

Second—"Can such reduction be made without endangering a full supply of water for the navigation of the Cayuga and Seneca canal?"

A reduction upon either of the foregoing propositions, will not endanger a supply of water for navigation.

Third—"If so reduced, will it be necessary to deepen any part of the canal, already constructed? If necessary, to what depth beyond the present bottom? and what will be the probable expense of such deepening and of the excavation to be made, for the purpose of reducing the waters of the lake to such level?"

If the level of the water in the outlet about half a mile below the foot of the lake is assumed, it would be necessary to reduce the bottom of the canal from the foot of the lake to Geneva, being a distance of one mile fifty-eight chains, and require the excavation of 15,594 cubic yards, a part of which would be difficult and expensive; and as all this excavation must be done in four feet of water, it would be somewhat difficult to estimate the expense, but it is believed that it could be done for about thirty cents per cubic yard.

If the level of the water in the outlet, immediately above the Waterloo dam, is to be adopted, it would be necessary to widen and deepen the channel of the outlet at several points; and as this level would be lower than the one last mentioned, it would increase the depth of cutting in the bottom of the canal, from the foot of the lake to Geneva.

If the level of the reef on which the Waterloo dam rests, is assumed, it would materially increase the expense of all the work before mentioned, and also render it necessary to deepen the canal at Waterloo and rebuild one lock.

The expense attending either of the two last propositions we are unable to estimate with any degree of accuracy.

In order to reduce the water of the lake below its natural level, upon either of the foregoing propositions, it would be necessary to enlarge the outlet immediately at the foot of the lake.

The Cayuga and Seneca canal will be navigable early next spring, and it would be somewhat difficult to excavate the earth in the bottom of the canal, without producing some interruption to the navigation The bottom of the canal at Waterloo is in part rock, and could only be excavated by entirely drawing off the water, which would of course be a suspension of the navigation.

It is apprehended by the owners of hydraulic establishments, that if the natural outlet, at the foot of the lake, should be so enlarged as to reduce the water in the lake below its natural level, it would injure the supply of water for about three months in the season. It is said that the natural obstructions at the foot of the lake prevents an early discharge of the spring flood, and that the lake serves as a reservoir during the dry months in the season, and we are inclined to believe that there is some force in this argument.

But we are of opinion, that this objection can be obviated, by raising the Waterloo dam five feet above the bottom of the canal, one foot of which would serve as a reservoir to be drawn from during the dry months in the season.—The descent from the natural level of the lake, to the top of the Waterloo dam, being three feet five inches, it would be practicable to raise said dam one foot, and by giving a proper capacity to the channel in the outlet above, to reduce the water of the lake below its natural level, from one and a half to two feet, leaving a declevity in the outlet of five inches.

The reduction of the water in the lake, below its natural level, on the plan last suggested, would be expensive.

By a reference to former reports on this subject, it will be seen that we have stated that "it is not practicable to reduce the water in the lake three feet below its natural level, without entirely removing the Waterloo dam and excavating a channel through the rock on which it rests." The commissioners were led to this conclusion by the report of the engineer to the legislature, in which he says, "to effect the proposed reduction of the surface of the lake, (meaning three feet,) it will therefore be necessary totally to remove the Waterloo dam and to deepen the canal at least two feet more, extending the excavation up the channel to the head of the island."

A careful levelling made last May, shewed the difference in the level between the lake and the reef, on which the dam rests, to be greater than was indicated in the report of the engineer.

WM. C. BOUCK,
SAMUEL YOUNG,
HENRY SEYMOUR.

February 20th, 1829.

Ordered, That the said communication, and the documents accompanying the same, be referred to the committee on canals and internal improvements.

Ordered, That the usual number of copies of the said communication be printed for the use of the legislature.

The house then proceeded to the consideration of the amendment of the Senate to the bill entitled "An act to incorporate the Albany institute."

The said bill and amendment were read; and the amendment having been again read, Mr. Speaker put the question whether the house would concur with the Senate in their amendment to the said bill, and it was determined in the affirmative, two-thirds of all the members elected to this house voting in favor thereof, as follows, to wit:

Resolved, That the bill do pass.

Ordered, That the clerk deliver the said bill to the Senate, and inform them that this house have passed the same without amendment.

Ordered, That the clerk deliver the said bills to the Governor.

The house then again resolved itself into a committee of the whole, on the bill entitled "An act authorising the construction of the Chenango canal;" and after some time spent thereon, Mr. Speaker resumed the chair. and Mr. J. Van Beuren, from the said committee, reported progress, and asked for and obtained leave to sit again.

A message from the Governor, delivered by his private secretary, was read, in the words following, to wit:

TO THE ASSEMBLY.

GENTLEMEN,

I have this day approved and signed the following bills:

"An act to divide the town of Kirkland in the county of Oneida."

"An act to alter the time of holding town-meetings in the towns of Danube and Starks in the county of Herkimer."

"An act for the relief of Cornelius Higgins."

MARTIN VAN BUREN.

Albany, February 21, 1829.

And then the House adjourned until ten o'clock on Monday morning next.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 1829.

The House met pursuant to adjournment.

The petition of sundry inhabitants of the county of Otsego, praying for the incorporation of the Susquehannah and Chemung navigation and rail-road company, was read, and committed to a committee of the whole, when on the bill upon that subject.

The petition of sundry inhabitants of the town of Camillus in the county of Onondaga, praying for a division of said town, was read, and referred to the select committee of which Mr. Jenkins is chairman.

The petition of Joseph Chambers and Benjamin Chambers, praying for the passage of a law, authorising them to erect a dam in the Susquehannah river, in the town of Union, in the county of Broome. was read, and referred to the committee on the establishment and improvement of roads and bridges, and the incorporation of turnpike companies.

The petition of E. M. Buell and others, praying for the passage of a law to confirm the appointment of the superintendent of the poor-house in the county of Livingston, was read, and referred to the committee on the judiciary.

The petition of John Young and others, praying for the passage of a law to authorise the comptroller to receive the return of certain arrears of taxes from the treasurer of the county of Livingston, was read, and referred to a select committee, consisting of Mr. P. C. Fuller, Mr. Goodman and Mr. Hazeltine.

The petition of sundry inhabitants of the counties of Greene, Schoharie and Otsego, praying for the incorporation of a company for the purpose of constructing a turnpike road from Cooperstown in the county of Otsego, to the village of Durham in the county of Greene, was read, and referred to the committee on the establishment and improvement of roads and bridges, and the incorporation of tur. pike companies.

Mr. Burt, from the committee on the establishment and improvement of roads and bridges, and the incorporation of turnpike companies, to which was referred the petition of sundry inhabitants of the town of Shawangunk in the county of Ulster, praying for the passage of a law to authorise the collection of a tax in said town, for the purpose of building a bridge across the Shawangunk creek, asked for leave to report by bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Burt, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act authorising the board of supervisors of the county of Ulster to raise by tax one thousand dollars, on the inhabitants of the town of Shawangunk in said county;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Bradish, from the select committee to which was referred the memorial of the president, managers, and company of the Delaware and Hudson canal company, praying a loan of the credit of the state for $500,000, reported:

That upon a subject of such peculiar interest to the memorialists, and of so much importance to the state, as that referred to them, the committee have felt it their duty to bestow the most patient and careful attention. In their deliberations upon this subject, they have been greatly aided by the detailed and able report made to the Senate on the 1st Feb. 1827, by the Hon. Silas Wright, Jun. and also by the very interesting and satisfactory communication upon this subject made to this house on the 27th ult. by the Hon. W. L. Marcy, late comptroller of the state.

By the former valuable document, which will be found on pages 117, 118, 119, 120, 121 and 122 of the journal of the Senate, for the year 1827, it appears that the memorialists were incorporated on the 23d of April, 1823, with a capital of $500.000, for the purpose of constructing a canal from the river Delaware to the river Hudson; of improving the navigation of the river Lackawaxen, and of purchasing certain coal mines in Pennsylvania. By an act passed on the 17th April, 1824, the said company were authorised to increase their capital to $1,500,000, and to extend their canal up the Delaware river to the mouth of the river Lackawaxen. By an act passed the 19th Nov. 1824, the company were authorised to employ, for twenty years, $500,000 of their capital in banking, in the city of New-York; but in case the company did not, within six months after the election of the first board of managers, commence the making of a canal or slack water navigation from the tide waters of the Hudson to the head waters of the Lackawaxen river, and did not expend in each and every succeeding year thereafter, at least $150,000, between the Hudson and Delaware rivers, until the canal or navigation should be completed between the said rivers, or should not have completed the whole line of navigation from the Hudson to the head of the Lackawaxen, within seven years from the passage of that act, so as to open a complete channel for the transportation of coal to this state; then, in either of those events, the banking privileges thereby granted were to cease and determine.

Under these several acts the company went into operation, in the early part of the year 182 , and in the summer of that year commenced their canal between the Hudson and Delaware rivers. In the course of that and the following season, the company completed their canal between the Hudson and Delaware, a distance of fifty-nine miles, and made considerable progress in extending it along the Delaware, towards the mouth of the Lackawaxen. Upon that part of the canal then completed, the company had constructed sixty lift-locks and one guard-lock, of hammered stone, laid in water cement; one aqueduct over the Neversink river, of two hundred and twenty-four feet in length, upon stone piers and abutments; one over the Rondout, entirely of stone, built upon two stone arches, the one of sixty feet and the other of fifty feet chord; ten other aqueducts, of various dimensions, all upon stone piers and abutments; fifteen culverts, all of stone; ninety-three bridges, with stone abutments and wing walls; and fences along most of the line of the canal: the company have since constructed upon this section of their canal, forty lock houses. They had expended upon this part of their canal, between the Hudson and Delaware, $772,000, $21,000 less than the original estimate of Judge Wright, the engineer employed by the company to survey and estimate this work. They had also expended on their canal, along the Delaware river, $37,000; in the purchase of coal beds in Pennsylvania, and real estate at the junction of their canal with the Hudson and Delaware, $52,500; and for boats to be used on the canal, $8,000, making their whole expenditure, on account of their canal and its accessories, $869,500. This expenditure was all made within one year and a half after the organization of the company, during which time they were, by their charter, to have expended only $225,000.

At this period, the company perceived that considerable additional funds would be necessary for the entire accomplishment of the enterprise in which they had embarked. These funds they had no means of providing, but by an appropriation of their banking capital to this object; by an increase of their canal capital; or by raising them upon their property or credit. They could not appropriate their banking capital to this object in good faith to the holders of their stock; or with safety either to the company or the public. Still more difficult would it have been to increase their canal capital by subscription. One-third only of their whole capital was yet productive. Their work was still incomplete; and although its early flattering prospects of advantage had been in no degree weakened by time and experience thus far, yet its entire success still remained problematical. To extend their subscription to their canal stock, therefore, would have been impossible. Under these embarrassments, the company applied to the legislature for aid. This application was favorably received.

That legislature had known the operations of this company, They had seen the credit and character they had given to their banking institution. They saw them embarked in an enterprise of great public good. They had witnessed the great vigor and unexampled economy and despatch, with which they had advanced thus far in the prosecution of their meritorious object. The company had already expended in this public spirited enterprise nearly $1,000,000. Further considerable funds were still necessary, and the company's means were deficient. That legislature, therefore, with a liberality and enlarged policy becoming the representatives of an enlightened and patriotic state, ever ready to second the exertions of all who are engaged in enterprises of public good, granted the aid sought. On the 10th of March, 1827, an act was passed, loaning the credit of the state for $500,000, to the company, upon a pledge of their canal property. This act further authorised the company to raise, by way of loan, upon its general credit, an additional sum of $300,000.

For the manner in which that act has been partly carried into effect, the committee beg leave to refer to the communication already mentioned, of the late comptroller, to this house upon that subject. From this it appears, that in pursuance of that act, the company did, on the 14th of March, 1827, execute to the people of this state, a mortgage upon their entire canal property. Satisfactory evidence of the validity of the company's title to this property, was submitted to the attorney-general, who made a full examination of the title deeds, and approved the mortgage. The latter was accepted by the comptroller, in behalf of the state, on the 16th of March 1827. The stock was afterwards issued to the company in conformity with the provisions of the said act, and the premium, amounting to $46,205, faithfully applied to its object, the common school fund.

By this liberal countenance and timely aid of the state, the hopes of the company were re-animated, and they looked forward, with renewed confidence, to an early and full accomplishment of their great enterprise. With the new means thus acquired, they went on with their operations with new and increased vigor. They despatched an engineer of acknowledged merit to England, for the purpose of examining the canals and rail roads in that country, and of procuring the iron plates and machinery for the company's rail road. That engineer has since returned to this country, and as is believed, with the most accurate and valuable information upon the subject of his mission, and having procured, upon most advantageous terms, the materials necessary for the rail road. These latter have also since arrived in this country.

In the mean time the company have completed their canal along the Delaware, the most difficult and most expensive part of their work. Upon this section of twenty-two miles, they have constructed four aqueducts, with stone piers and abutments; two culverts in stone; nineteen bridges, with stone abutments and wing walls; eight waste weirs; thirteen locks, with stone walls and wooden chambers; twelve lock houses; twelve miles of stone embankment; three and two-fifths miles of excavation for the whole canal in solid rock.

The company have also extended their canal up the Lackawaxen to the forks of the Dyberry. Upon this section of twenty-five miles, there are three aqueducts, with stone piers and abutments; one culvert in stone; twenty-five bridges, with stone abutments and wing walls; sixteen waste weirs; thirty-seven locks, with stone walls and wooden chambers; thirty one lock houses; thirteen miles of stone embankment; and one and three-fourths miles of excavation in rock.

At the forks of the Dyberry the canal terminates. In the month of October last, the canal, in its whole extent of 106 miles, was completed, and received the last test of its sufficiency by the letting of the water into it. The result of this last test was perfectly satisfactory, as to the solidity of the work; and, at the same time, established another point of great importance, the perfect sufficiency, indeed superabundant supply of water. On the 19th of November, the company had the satisfaction of seeing the first squadron of boats arrive at the head of their canal, laden with iron plates and machinery for their rail road. Considerable progress has already been made in the construction of this last part of their great work; and with the additional financial means necessary for that purpose, it may be completed in June next. But in approaching this termination of their enterprise, the company have encountered new and unforeseen difficulties. The act of 10th March, 1827, besides loaning to the said company the credit of the state for $500,000, authorised the company to raise, by way of loan upon its general credit, the further sum of $300,000; these two sums together making the amount then estimated necessary to complete their work. But of this latter provision of that act, the company have been unable to avail themselves. The state having a first lien upon their entire canal property and its accessories, capitalists, who might otherwise have been induced to loan their funds upon a pledge of this property, have been found unwilling to do so upon a second mortgage thereon. The company have no other means of raising the further funds necessary for the entire accomplishment of their enterprise. Under these circumstances, and relying upon that enlightened liberality and enlarged policy to which they have heretofore appealed with so much success, the company again address themselves to the legislature upon this subject, and ask a further loan of the credit of the state for $500,000, to be secured in the same manner as is provided by the act of 10th March, 1827.

In examining the merits of this application, various important considerations have presented themselves to the minds of the committee. These seem to involve the inquiries,

1st. Whether it be good policy in the state, in any case, to adopt this mode of effecting objects of internal improvement; and embark, in this form, in aid of such private enterprises as are of a public character, and are connected with the public good? If so,

2dly. Whether the enterprise of the Delaware and Hudson canal company be of that character? And if so, 3dly. Whether the public benefits of the work, and the security offered by the company, be sufficient to justify the additional loan of the credit of the state now asked for by them.

Although the committee consider the state as having, by its act of the 10th of March, 1827, already decided in the affirmative, the first and second of the above questions, yet they ask to be indulged in a few remarks upon the general subject embraced in the first of those questions, and to submit some considerations which seem to them strongly to recommend the policy already adopted by the state.

In enterprises of internal improvement undertaken by individuals or corporations, interest creates the strongest motive, and affords the safest guaranty for caution and prudence in their first projection, and for economy and wisdom in their construction and subsequent management. Where the fortunes, the hopes, and the character of individuals are to be embarked, none but projects that hold out a reasonable prospect of success, of advantage to the public, and consequent profit to those more immediately engaged in them, are likely to be undertaken. And these, under the direction of individual interest, will always be accomplished and managed with greater vigilance, economy and wisdom, than can, under the most perfect system attainable, ever be effected by a government. The state, therefore, in lending its aid to such projects, as far as may be safe, and consistent with its general duty to the public, and a proper care of all the various interests under its protection, does, in the opinion of the committee, most effectually promote the great cause of internal improvement. In saying this, however, the committee would not be understood as expressing the opinion that it would be a wise policy for the state to adopt this as its exclusive system of internal improvement. On the contrary, they would view this as merely an accessary to its present general system. In that system they trust the state will hold on her steady course; that nothing will be permitted to arrest her hitherto successful progress in a system which has given new life and vigor to our industry in all its departments; which has so greatly increased our agricultural and manufacturing production, and mercantile profit: which has, in short, covered the state with prosperity, and her name with glory: but that she will, as fast and as far as her means and a proper regard to the other objects of her care may permit, persevere in that system until the advantages of convenient and cheap transportation shall be extended to the remotest bounds of her territory, and to the most distant of her citizens. Nor would they, in all cases, make it an indispensable condition to the prosecution of this system, that it should directly bring revenue into the treasury: but in the increased prosperity thereby diffused throughout the community, and the consequent increased wealth, capital and resources of the state, they would find a sufficient motive for advocating and encouraging particular projects. While, therefore, they would hope to see the state pursue her steady march in the prosecution of this great system of internal improvement, they would also hope to see her ever ready to afford her countenance and aid, as far as possible, to meritorious and public spirited individuals and corporations, engaged in the accomplishment of objects connected with the same system.

Considering, therefore, the 1st and 2d questions as already established, the 3d inquiry is, "Whether the public benefits of this work, and the security offered by the company, be sufficient to justify the additional loan of the credit of the state now asked for by them?"

Upon the subject of security, it will be recollected that, at the time the loan of the credit of the state was made to this company, the company had expended on their work only $869,500. To this, add $500,000, the sum then borrowed, and which was to be applied to the work, and the amount will be $1,369,500. This then, supposing the expenditure to have been judiciously made, and that the work was worth what it would then have cost, was the estimated value of the pledge for this first loan, according to its terms. The company have now expended in the purchase of additional real estate, and on their work $1,875,000. Add to this $500,000, the loan now asked, and which, if granted, is also to be applied to the completion of the work, and the amount will be $2,375,000. Deduct from this sum, $1,369,500, the estimated value of the pledge for the first loan, and, upon the former supposition, there will remain $1,005,500, the value fairly to be estimated of the pledge for the second loan. In addition to this, it should be considered that the sum, now asked for, is absolutely necessary to complete the work, and thereby render productive the pledge now held by the state for the first loan. So that even supposing the worst to happen—even that which timidity or interested hostility alone have secretly insinuated, but of which there is not the slightest shadow of probability, that the company should abandon their work to the state, for the loan already granted, the state would then be compelled to expend on its own account the very sum now asked, in order to give effective value to the property. But the fact that the company have embarked their character in this enterprise, and have, as they believe judiciously, already expended thereon their private fortunes to the extent of $1,375,000, furnishes the most conclusive answer to these suggestions of timidity, or hostile interest, and affords the state the strongest guaranty that the company will make every possible effort, and even sacrifice, in order to retain the possession of a property they deem so valuable, and of the future productiveness of which, every step of their progress thus far, and their whole experience hitherto, have but confirmed their most sanguine hopes. The grounds upon which these hopes rest are those upon which also depend the security of the state. To these, therefore, the committee have felt it their duty to give the most minute and careful attention.

What then are these grounds? What are the sources of profit to be derived from this work, to which the company may reasonably look for remuneration to themselves, and the consequent means of meeting, with promptness and fidelity, their engagements to the state? These have appeared to your committee to be,

1st. The ordinary transportation on the canal and rail road, connected with the general business of the country through which this work passes; and 2ndly. The coal trade.

The section of country accessible through this channel of communication, together with that to which it would more immediately afford the advantages of an easy and cheap transportation, is a country of considerable extent. Many parts of this country are naturally very fertile, and are already under high cultivation. The country, generally, is capable of furnishing a large surplus of agricultural and manufacturing products, and already consumes a considerable amount of merchandise. These would furnish immediately a considerable amount of tonnage for transportation on this canal and rail road, as they would all seek, through this channel, their proper market.

But in calculating the future productiveness of a canal or rail road, the committee believe it would be unfair and incorrect to confine that calculation to the amount of transportation which the country through which they pass would immediately furnish. A priori reasoning would anticipate, and all experience has actually shown, that works of this kind have invariably increased production: That in all cases, where the capacity of producing and consuming exists, the increase of articles for transportation has uniformly kept pace with the increased facilities for such transportation. With that capacity of the country through which this work passes, or which is accessible by means of it, the increased production which will doubtless be created by the work itself, is thought a legitimate basis of calculation in any estimate of its future profits. Upon the most probable and moderate estimate of those profits from this source, the company confidently believe that they will be found sufficient, at least, to defray the expense of superintendence and repairs of their work. This estimate seems, to the committee, a reasonable one. Beyond this, the company have not gone in their calculations of immediate revenue from this source. For a remuneration for their large investments of capital; for the hazards, the persevering efforts, the anxious solicitudes, and heavy responsibilities attending their enterprise, the company do now, as they have ever done, look to the anticipated profits of their coal trade: Upon these also must, after all, depend the security of the state. This, therefore, leads us to the examination of the second point.

The little experience we have as yet had in this country upon this subject, has led many to doubt whether a canal or rail road, based either exclusively or mainly on coal, could be profitable. The experience of other countries, however, abundantly shews the reverse. That of England has been the most extensive, and would therefore, perhaps, be the most safe in reference. It is, at the same time, the most satisfactory. By an examination of 100 of the most important canals of that country, and upwards of twenty of the most considerable rail roads, it will appear most conclusively established, that those which have been based either exclusively or mainly on coal, have been by far the most profitable. These have yielded to their stockholders, and now actually divide, from 10 to 100 per cent. per annum upon their investments. Indeed it may be stated as a fact, which experience in that country has fully established, that more than two-thirds of the entire revenue of their canals, and more than four-fifths of that of their rail roads is derived from coal. This result, extravagant as it may appear to some, and important as it will be admitted by all to be, is fully and satisfactorily explained by the fact, that more than twenty-eight millions of tons of coal are annually raised from the mines of Great Britain, and transported upon their canals and rail roads. The committee, therefore, think it too late now to entertain a doubt whether a canal or rail road based either exclusively or mainly on coal, can be profitable. Whether the work of the Delaware and Hudson canal company will be so, must depend upon its own peculiar circumstances and merits. These it now becomes necessary to examine in detail. In doing this the committee have considered,

1st. The company's supply of coal.

2ndly. Its quality.

3dly. The actual cost at which it can be delivered at tide water on the Hudson River. And, 4thly. The quantity that can be sold annually and at what price.

1. The company's supply of coal may be considered as inexhaustible. Their mines have been very thoroughly explored, and a detailed survey and estimate thereof made by Mr. James Stott, a gentleman distinguished for his science and experience in these matters. A report of this survey accompanied with maps, drawings, &c. has been laid before the committee, and has been to them perfectly satisfactory upon this branch of the subject.

2. As to the second point, the committee consider the character of this coal as fully and satisfactorily established as its quantity. The testimony of all who have used it concur in declaring its quality superior to that of any anthracite as yet known, both for domestic use and for manufacturing purposes. It seems to unite the peculiar and valuable qualities of the two anthracites best known, and most extensively used in this country, viz: the Lehigh and the Schuylkill. All pronounce it superior to the Lehigh for manufacturing purposes, and to the Schuylkill for domestic use, and for generating steam. To this effect is the testimony of several respectable manufacturers and private gentlemen, who have used these three kinds of coal in these several ways. The committee, therefore, consider this point as conclusively established.

3. As to the cost at which this coal can be delivered at tide water on the Hudson river, the committee have carefully examined the estimates thereof, submitted to them by the company. These, it is proper to remark, are based upon actual experience, and contracts now existing. By these estimates, that cost is estimated at $3 per ton, for the current year; but, it is said, will be reduced to $2.52, when the company shall be in full operation. In these estimates the committee have entire confidence.

4. The fourth point embraces an inquiry much more extensive in its nature, and upon which it is much more difficult to arrive at absolute certainty. It is, however, believed by the committee, that upon this point it is possible to attain such reasonable probability as will be sufficient for the decision of any important question connected with this part of the subject. For this purpose it will be necessary to inquire,

1st. What will be the market accessible to this company? and, 2ndly. What the amount of coal required for such market?

That market we will suppose to be only the towns bordering on the Hudson river below Troy; the city of New-York; the islands in its neighborhood; and the country accessible through Long-Island Sound. The population, which this market embraces, may be estimated at 500,000, and the amount of fuel necessary for its consumption, equal at least to 500,000 tons of coal. But a large proportion of wood, say equal to seven-tenths of the entire consumption of fuel, is still used. The amount of coal, therefore, now in demand for this market, may be taken to be 150,000 tons. But while the consumption of wood is gradually decreasing, that of coal is increasing. It is confidently believed that this increase in the consumption of coal will be still more rapid if its price be reduced. This only is necessary to induce its substitution for wood on board of steam boats; and indeed, in all cases for the generation of steam, and for manufacturing establishments. The coal for this consumption is now supplied either from England, Nova Scotia, Virginia, the Lehigh or Schuylkill. In consequence of the great change which has taken place in our trade with England, the quantity of foreign coal imported is diminishing. That of Virginia, too, is relatively not increasing, either in quantity or in favour; while the anthracites are getting into more general use, and are daily becoming more popular; and this too, notwithstanding the gradual decline in the price of wood and the bituminous coals, and the gradual increase of that of the anthracites. Of these anthracites, the Lackawana, (which is the company's coal) the Lehigh and the Schuylkill, are the best known and most used. These, then, are the coals which are likely hereafter to supply the market in question.

In inquiring how far the Delaware and Hudson canal company are likely to participate in that market, the committee would be unwilling to put in disadvantageous comparison the rival interests of any other individuals or corporations, now laudably engaged in supplying that market with a good and cheap fuel. To such individuals and corporations, they feel in the highest degree friendly; and wish them all the success and profit, to which their enterprise and public spirit justly entitle them. Nor do the committee deem such comparison necessary, in order to arrive at a safe conclusion upon this subject. They believe the field sufficiently ample for all, and its bounds are constantly enlarging. Supposing then the demand for the market in question, to be as above assumed, that is 150,000 tons of coal per annum; (and the committee believe it will be much greater when the price shall be reduced,) and that the Delaware and Hudson canal company should participate only equally with the Lehigh and Schuylkill interests, in supplying that demand, the result would be 50,000 tons annually. Supposing the actual cost to be $3 per ton, and that it be sold at $5 only per ton, the profit to the company will then be $100,000: this would be amply sufficient to pay the interest on the actual loan, and that now sought, and to provide a sinking fund for their ultimate redemption. That the Delaware and Hudson canal company will participate, at least to the extent supposed, with the two interests above mentioned, in the market in question, no one can for a moment entertain a doubt, who considers the established quality of their respective coals, and their respective facilities for bringing them into market. The committee will not inquire whether this company is likely to participate in this market to a greater extent than is above supposed, because they believe that sufficient for the present inquiry; but they feel themselves constrained, by a sense of duty, to advert to one circumstance, in their judgment important, and which ought in justice to be taken into consideration in any decision upon this branch of this subject. The Delaware and Hudson canal company are the sole owners, both of the mines from which they derive their coal, and the entire channel for its transportation to the tide waters of the Hudson. Neither for a supply of coal, therefore, nor for the means of getting it into market, are they at all dependent upon the caprices of a distinct, changing, and perhaps rival interest. They can, at all times, control their entire operations. This, the committee cannot but consider a very important advantage.

From a minute and full examination, therefore, of all the circumstances and considerations connected with this branch of the subject, the committee are unhesitatingly of opinion, that neither from any known sources, nor through any existing, projected, or possible channel of communication with those sources, can coal be brought into the market in question, into successful competition with that of the Delaware and Hudson canal company. Whether any new, and as yet unknown, sources of a better coal, will hereafter be discovered nearer to this market than any now known, is matter of mere conjecture, and of course too uncertain upon which to found any safe and practical conclusion. Upon this point, the committee cannot refrain from repeating the very judicious remark of the late comptroller, and which, in their opinion, does equal credit to his intelligence and to his wisdom. He observes, "that the hidden riches of this country are occasionally laid open by fortunate accident, or the persevering efforts of its enterprising inhabitants; and hopes may possibly be entertained by some, that valuable and abundant coal mines may yet be discovered on or near our navigable waters, that might supply the article much below the cost of bringing it to market from the region in which it is now known to exist. But men should not, and wise men do not, act with any special reference to such exceedingly rare events. They do not neglect improving the means they have, and spend their lives in waiting for fortune and accident to furnish them with better."

The committee, therefore, instead of entering upon the boundless but uncertain field of conjecture, or inquiring what may or may not be within the wide range of future possibilities, have thought it more safe to take things as they actually exist. Judging from these, and carefully considering all the circumstances connected with this subject, they are well persuaded that this work of the Delaware and Hudson canal company, cannot fail to be greatly profitable to its enterprising owners; and, of course, to furnish them with abundant means for the regular payment of the interest on the actual loan, and that now sought, and also to provide in season for their ultimate redemption. The committee, therefore, believe, that for the additional loan now asked, the company offer the state a reasonable and abundant security.

Having come to this conclusion, the committee ask leave to submit some of the considerations of a general nature, which have strongly presented themselves to their minds in its favor; and which they cannot but believe will induce its final adoption by the house.

This work of the Delaware and Hudson canal company ought not to be considered as a mere private enterprise, although as such it is, almost without parallel, magnificent; but it is a work of a public nature, intimately connected with the interests and with the character of the state. As one of her great works of internal improvement, which have already illustrated her name and formed the broad basis of her prosperity and power, this work is second to but one. It is, at the same time a proud monument of the enterprise and public spirit of her citizens. For solidity and economy this canal may fairly challenge comparison. The rail road, when completed, it is believed will be one of the most perfect specimens of the kind in this or any other country. The company have been at great expense in obtaining from Europe all the information and improvements, which science or experiment have there given to the most perfect works of this kind. They have imported the first, and as the committee believe, the only locomotive engines as yet introduced into this country, and which are considered an improvement upon the most perfect heretofore in use in Europe. So that the company's rail road, combining as it will all the varieties of level, ascent and descent, with stationary and locomotive engines, will not only furnish to those, who may wish to use it, the means of cheap transportation, but will present to the American engineer the most perfect model of this means of internal communication. As connected, therefore, with the great interest of internal improvement, this whole work of the Delaware and Hudson canal company may be considered a public work. Its future utility and public benefits to the whole state will also entitle it to that character. To a large and productive section of her territory, and to a numerous and interesting portion of her population, it affords the advantages of a convenient and cheap transportation, to and from her great market. To the manufacturer it offers a material for which, in some of his operations, he has no good substitute, and which, in all others, is an invaluable acqusition. To the rich it offers a fuel superior in quality, and more reduced in price, than any as yet known. To the poor it brings a comfort, so reduced and moderate in its cost, as to be within the compass even of his humble means. And yet all this has been accomplished by private enterprise, with private capital, and at private risk and hazard. It has imposed no tax upon the people; it has not taken a dollar from the effective funds in the treasury, but has already placed there more than $46,000, for the benefit of that fund, in which we have all so deep an interest, "The Common School Fund."

These considerations, in the judgment of the committee, present strong reasons in favor of this application; and such as, they feel well persuaded, will have their due weight with the representatives of a just and enlightened people, proud of her public works, and jealous of her public character. Profoundly impressed with these sentiments, the committee feel that they cannot better conclude their report upon this interesting subject, than in the language of the last paragraph of the memorial:

"The Erie canal stands first in the bright history of internal improvement, in the United States. Of those completed, the Delaware and Hudson canal may boldly claim the second rank. The company asks, for the last time, the assistance of the legislature; not for their misfortunes; not to compensate for losses, for they are proud to say that none have occurred; but in aid of a noble work, now on the verge of completion: a work which embellishes the character of the state, for enterprise and public spirit, while it opens to its citizens, the sure prospect of great and lasting advantages."

With this report the committee have prepared a bill, which they now ask leave to bring in.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Bradish, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to loan the credit of the state to the president, managers and company of the Delaware and Hudson canal company;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Ordered, That the usual number of copies of the said bill and report be printed for the use of the legislature.

Mr. Dayton, from the select committee to which was referred the petition of Edward Lyde and others, for an act authorising the said Edward Lyde and John M'Comb, surviving trustees under the will of Henry Spingler deceased, to sell certain real estate, reported:

That it appears to the committee, that Henry Spingler, who died in the year 1814, devised certain real estate situate in the (now) ninth and twelfth wards of the city of New-York, to Edward Lyde, John M'Comb and John Bonsall, as joint tenants in trust, for the use of his wife Mary Spingler, (one of the petitioners,) during her natural life, and after her death, for the use of his daughter Eliza Murray Fonerdon, (another of the petitioners,) with contingent remainders to other persons in the said will named, charged with the payment of an annuity for life to James Fonerdon, (another of the petitioners,) should he survive the said Mary Spingler and Eliza Murray Fonerdon.

It further appears, that the said John Bonsall has since died, whereby the said estate has become vested in the said Edward Lyde and John M'Comb, as surviving trustees, for the uses aforesaid.

It also appears to the committee, that a street called Thirteenth-street, has been opened through the said property, and regulated, but not paved; on which account, an assessment has been imposed upon a part of said premises, of eleven hundred and twenty-seven dollars and two cents, which is yet due and unpaid, together with interest thereon from June last: That proceedings are now pending before the corporation of the said city, for opening and regulating the fifth avenue and fourteenth and fifteenth streets, which are also intended to pass through the said premises; and for draining the low grounds thereon, which will occasion large additional assessments: That the said premises are almost wholly unproductive, and yield but a small annual income, altogether inadequate to satisfy the said assessment now due thereon, and to defray the ordinary taxes, and probable assessments, charges, and expenses attending the opening, regulating, and paving the avenue and streets aforesaid, and the filling in, regulating, and levelling the grounds adjoining the said avenue and streets; and considering the unproductiveness of the said estate, and the incumbrances thereon, there appears to the committee to be no mode by which the various assessments and expenses now incurred, and likely to be incurred, can be discharged by those interested, except by a sale of part of the said premises for that purpose.

The committee therefore recommend the passage of an act, authorising the said Edward Lyde and John M'Comb, surviving trustees, to sell and convey, from time to time, so much of the said real estate as may be necessary to discharge the assessment already imposed thereon, and other assessments and necessary expenses which may hereafter be incurred; for which purpose, the committee have prepared a bill, and ask leave to introduce the same.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Dayton, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act authorising Edward Lyde and John M'Comb, surviving trustees under the will of Henry Spingler deceased, to sell certain real estate;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Allison gave notice that he would, at some future day, ask leave to introduce a bill, confirming all conveyances made, and other business transacted, in the name of Ramapo, in the town of Hampstead in the county of Rockland, and to establish a permanent name for said town.

Mr. W. M'Donald gave notice that he would, on some future day, ask leave to introduce a bill to alter the time of holding the October term of the courts of common pleas and general sessions in the county of Warren.

Ordered, That Mr. Carley have leave of absence for twelve days, and Mr. Austin for three days.

Mr. A. Smith gave notice that he would, on some future day, ask leave to introduce a bill for the preservation of fish in certain ponds in Westchester county.

Mr. P. C. Fuller gave notice, that on some future day, he would ask leave to introduce a bill, declaring a certain section of the Canasaraga creek a public highway.

A communication from the comptroller, was read, in the words following, to wit:

COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
ALBANY, Feb. 23, 1829.

SIR,

I have the honor herewith to transmit a report, made in pursuance of a resolution of the Honorable the Assembly of the 17th instant.

I am, very respectfully,
Your obedient servant,
SILAS WRIGHT, JUNIOR.

Hon. PETER ROBINSON,
Speaker of the Assembly.

STATE OF NEW-YORK,
COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE.

The comptroller, in compliance with a resolution of the Honorable the Assembly, requesting him to report to that house, "any information in his possession or power, as to what would be the effect on the revenue of this state, should a superintendent of auctions be appointed for the city of New-York," respectfully reports:

That there is not within the possession or power of the comptroller, any information upon the subject of the inquiry made in the resolution, except such as is derived from the investigations made by his predecessor during the last summer, pursuant, as it would seem, to complaints made to him of the abuse and violation of the auction law in the city of New-York. This information is found embodied in a circular letter written by the late comptroller, and addressed to the several auctioneers in that city, detailing the violations and abuses, and pointing out the misconstructions of that law, so far as discovered by that officer in the examinations made by him.

The following is a copy of that letter:

COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
Albany, July 1, 1828.

SIR,

In consequence of repeated complaints made to me of the violation, or the abuse of the auction law, in the city of New-York, I conceived it my duty to give the subject an examination; and I extremely regret to say, this examination proves that these complaints were but too well founded. There are several auctioneers who have executed the law in its true spirit, and with a strict regard to its provisions: such will be conscious, without any assurance from me, that my remarks do not apply to them. There are too many, however, considering how respectable that class of officers is, to whom they will apply.

The violation of the auction law which is perhaps the most manifest, and seems to be carried to the most mischievous extent, is selling goods subject to duty (except those sold in original packages as imported, household furniture, and such bulky articles as have been usually sold in warehouses, or in public streets, or on the wharves,) in other places than the houses or stores designated by the auctioneers as their places for holding their auction sales.

By a reference to the 17th and 18th sections of the auction law, (Chap. XVII. Title I. of the Revised Statutes,) it will be perceived, that the provisions on this subject are too clear to have given rise to any misapprehension in the mind of those who had given them proper attention. The 17th section declares, that no auctioneer shall have more than one house or store for the purpose of holding his auctions; which one house or store shall be designated by him in writing, and the writing shall be filed with the clerk of the city. The 18th section prohibits any auctioneer from exposing any goods or articles, subject to duty, for sale by auction, at any other place, except such articles as I have before mentioned. I have indubitable proof as to some auctioneers, and the express acknowledgment of several others, that they have been in the constant habit of violating these plain and intelligible provisions of the auction law. Several auctioneers are in the practie of selling books, subject to duty by auction, at other places than those houses or stores designated by them as the places for their public sales. Every sale of this kind is an unquestionable violation of the law, which subjects the offending auctioneer to an indictment for a misdemeanor, and a fine of $250 for each offence. The violation of the 17th and 18th sections of the auction law is not confined to the case of sales of books. I believe there is a case of one auctioneer, who has authorised sales, which, in strict conformity to the law, could only have been made at his designated store or house, in six or seven different places: several others have violated the law, but not so recklessly.

Sales have also been made without the continued presence of the auctioneer. Some auctioneers (the number I hope is few,) have reconciled it to their consciences (by what course of reason I am unable to divine,) to take the oath that they have attended personally, sales which have continued four or five hours, when in truth they have only been at the place of sale but a very small part of the time during which the sales were made. The attendance upon the sale by auction, which the law requires of the auctioneer, is a constant one. He must so particularly attend to and manage the sale, as to know that the account he swears to, is correct. If he swears that the account is correct, without knowing that it is so, he is guilty of perjury, even if it is correct. These remarks do not refer to those sales from which the auctioneer is absent in such cases and for such causes as are permitted by law.

In relation to auction sales of books, there has been, besides the frequent violation of the law to which I have alluded, a misconstruction of it, which has proved very detrimental to the public revenue: Only those books have been returned by some, if not all auctioneers, who have sold them, as dutiable, which have been imported. Books which are not manufactured within this state, are subject to duty. Those printed at Philadelphia, Boston, Baltimore, or any other place within the jurisdiction of the United States, except the state of New-York, are as much subject to duty as those printed at London or Edinburgh. Some of the auctioneers have acknowledged to me, that they have not returned books printed in any of the United States, as subject to duty; and I am informed, that the practice of all who sell books is similar. If this is so, the state has lost a very large amount of duties, by this misconstruction of the law. An attempt will be made to enforce the payment of these duties.

Several of the auctioneers have entered upon the execution of their offices, before they had designated the house or store for holding their sales, and filed the written designation with the clerk of the city. This is a violation of the law, punishable by indictment as a misdemeanor, and finable in a penalty of two hundred and fifty dollars.

The 21st section requires, that every auctioneer in the city of New-York, shall give two days' previous notice, in one or more of the public newspapers of that city, of the auction sales which he may lawfully make at any place other than the house or store designated by him for his sales. Any notice of such sales, which is not in the name of the auctioneer who is to make them, cannot be the auctioneer's notice. The auctioneer who sells under such circumstances, without giving notice himself, forfeits $500 for each offence; and others aiding and assisting in such sales, could not, it is conceived, shield themselves under the commission of the auctioneer, but might be prosecuted as offenders against the 7th section of the auction law, and would be subject to fine and imprisonment; a fine of $500, and an imprisonment of three months.

Doubts have been entertained, whether a notice in the name of the firm of which the auctioneer is one, is such a notice as is required by the 21st section. Although it would be better to advertise such sales in the name of the auctioneer alone, for a variety of reasons; yet as the law seems to allow of partners, I am of opinion, where an auctioneer and his partners designated, and their names filed with the city clerk, constitute a firm in business, a notice of sale by the firm, is the notice of the auctioneer who is a member of the firm.

The punctuality of the auctioneers of the city of New-York, as a body, in making their returns, and paying their duties, is worthy of commendation; but there are a few, who are very far from meriting this commendation. In case of delay in this respect, and especially if of frequent occurrence, I shall exercise the power vested in me, of vacating the commissions of delinquent auctioneers; to the end, that those who will strictly comply with the law, may have an opportunity of being appointed, instead of those who forfeit their commissions by disregarding the law.

I have the honor to be,
With great respect,
Your obedient servant,
W. L. MARCY.

The comptroller considers it his duty to state to the house, that he has made inquiries of his predecessor, as to the manner in which this information was obtained; and he finds that the facts stated in the foregoing circular, were discovered, partly by the personal examinations and inquiries of the late comptroller himself, and partly by the examinations, observations and inquiries of an agent employed by him to visit the auction rooms and places of public sales in the city of New-York, for the express purpose of ascertaining whether any, and what, violations of the law existed in the practice of the auctioneers in that city. No provision, however, existing by law to defray the expense of these investigations, it is to be presumed they were hurried and imperfect; and the small bill of expense incurred by sending to New-York the agent above mentioned, still remains unpaid.

The above facts will probably satisfy the house, that abuses of the law did exist; and that the consequences of these abuses, must have been a diminution of the revenue of the state, derived from auction sales.

Whether these abuses and violations of the law yet continue, or whether they were checked by the efforts made by the late comptroller, is not known. Hence the comptroller is unable to say, whether or not a superintendent of these sales is necessary, or what effect the appointment of such an office would have upon the revenue of the state, any farther than an opinion upon these points may be inferred from the facts stated in the foregoing circular. The house, therefore, having before it all the facts to be obtained from this office, will desire no aid in drawing its own inferences from them.

If the conclusion should be, that some provision be made by law to superintend or inspect these sales, it has been made a question, and the comptroller respectfully suggests to the house, whether the appointment of a permanent superintendent of auctions, resident in New-York; or the designation, from time to time, by some proper officer or officers of the government, of a temporary agent, to inspect the auctions, and ascertain what abuses and violations of the law may exist, as occasion may call for such interference; would be the course most likely to prove effective, in detecting and preventing any frauds upon the revenue.

All of which is respectfully submitted,
SILAS WRIGHT, Junior.

Ordered, That the usual number of copies of the said communication be printed for the use of the legislature.

A communication from the canal board, was read, in the words following, to wit:

The canal board, to whom was referred by the honorable the Assembly, the petition of Charles Baker, praying compensation for injuries alleged to have been sustained by a breach in the Champlain canal, submit the following report:

It is ascertained by information derived from the acting canal commissioner, that during the last season, a breach took place in the canal, a short distance to the south of Dunham's basin, which spread water, sand and gravel over the field of the petitioner, and probably occasioned injury to his crop; but to what extent, is unknown to the canal board. With respect to the losses complained of by the petitioner, "in the destruction of his crops during the last three years, by occasion of water thrown upon his land, by means of the canal, as your petitioner conceives," the canal board have no information.

The claim of the petitioner not being provided for by any existing law, and several claims of a like description having been presented during the present session, it may be expected of the canal board that they will present to the legislature such suggestions as during their present pressure of business occur to them on the subject

If the Erie and Champlain canals had been constructed by an incorporated company, who had paid the damages for the appropriation of all the "lands, waters and streams" occupied by the canals and their appendages, as the state has done, it may be well to inquire, whether, if the "bank of the canal was carried away by a freshet, and the materials of which the embankment was composed, and the flood were thereby let out upon the fields and crops of the petitioner," he could sustain against such incorporated company a claim for damage, either in law or equity. As between an individual and such company, it is not believed that such a claim could be sustained. No want of attention nor any neglect, is imputed to the superintendent or any other agent of the state having charge of the canal; and whatever injury the petitioner has sustained, originated from a providential accurrence, over which the limited powers of man have no control. Such occurrences are denominated by the common law "acts of God," and are regarded as paternal chastisements, which do no injury to him upon whom they are inflicted. Hence the maxim, "Actus Dei nemini facit injuriam."

It may be said, if the canal had not been constructed, the injury could not have happened to the petitioner. This is true; and the like allegation is equally true in all cases in which an application of the above mentioned maxim furnishes a protection against claims for damages. Without a similar allegation, (as that the injury arose from an artificial, instead of a natural stream,) no pretence for a claim could exist. If the mill-dam of an individual should be swept away by a flood, without any carelessness or neglect on his part, and if the accession to the stream, created by the discharge of his mill-pond, should inundate and destroy the mills and bridges and crops below, still he would not be liable for these damages, although it might be alleged and proved that the injury could not have occurred, had his dam not been built. If a house set on fire by lightning, or blown down by a tornado, produces injury to contiguous buildings, the owner is not responsible for the damages, although the house is the proximate cause of the injury. Such, it is believed, are the fixed principles of law, in relation to all claims of a like description, between litigating individuals.

The question then arises, whether a different rule should be established, in cases where claims are made against the state? The strict principles of law and of justice are immutable, and inculcate the same even handed dispensation to the rich and the poor, the bond and the free. But in the administration of justice in cases where the pecuniary claims of an individual and of the state come in collision, it is extremely difficult, if not impossible, to hold an even balance. The history of legislation will demonstrate that thousands of claims have been sanctioned against the state, which as between man and man, could not have been sustained for a moment; and they are often allowed upon testimony which no court of justice would tolerate. The records of our jurisprudence will evince that the highest tribunals are not exempt from that general bias which gives an inclination in favor of individuals and against the public. In the suits that have arisen in the construction of the canals, between individuals and the public agents, it has been found in almost every case, that juries, on some pretext or other, lean against the state and in favor of the litigating individual. The same principle is observable in the testimony of witnesses in support of individual claims. This principle is deeply implanted in the human heart, nor is it wonderful that it should exist, when it is considered that no philanthropy is so general and so intense as to inspire the individual who is under its influence, with the same attachment to all the people of the state, as he feels for his immediate neighbors, acquaintances and friends. The constant reflection too, that the claim, whatever it may be, is but little for the public, and is much for the individual, gives a ceaseless impetus to the current.

It is provided by the constitution, that the canals shall always remain the property of the state. And it seems to be worthy of reflection, whether the state should establish a principle which will make it responsible in perpetuity for the damages occasioned by such acts of Providence as the one, stated in the petition. Gardens, orchards, and highly cultivated fields, together with manufacturing establishments, hydraulic machinery, and flourishing villages, will continue for years to be multiplied along the borders of the canals, and often in such situations as to be seriously and extensively injured by breaches of the banks. The intense frosts which sometimes occur in winter, loosen and expand the embankments, and when followed by sudden and heavy spring rains, are, and will always continue to be the inevitable cause of breaches in the canals. The floods and freshets of summer and of autumn, are sometimes so sudden, extensive and unexpected, that no human vigilance can guard against their destructive effects. Breaches sometimes suddenly take place, without any visible cause, and where no possible danger was apprehended, perhaps in some instances by the secret perforation of vermin through the banks.

If the rule were established, that the state was responsible for the damages occasioned by breaches, would it not furnish a temptation to produce them, which unprincipled cupidity would not always resist? In fifteen minutes, in the darkness of night, a man with a spade would make an opening for the water through the towing-path, and in ten minutes more, every trace of his operations would be obliterated by the sweeping current. And as the state generally pays to the full extent, and often beyond, the risk of detection which, from the nature of the case, is small, might be counterbalanced by the above consideration. Crimes of equal turpitude, and with less temptation, are frequently committed.

If it is understood that those who are injured by breaches in the canal are to bear the loss, it will produce a constant and favorable vigilance along the line, which may frequently tend to prevent them, and an alacrity in aiding the superintendents in their reparation.

It has happened in one instance, during the past season, that the superintendent perceiving that the canal was in imminent danger of a breach during a flood, on a part of the line where the consequences were very alarming, made several openings in the bank to discharge the accumulating waters, at such places as would produce the least injury. Such cases may again happen. And it might be reasonable to make some legal provision for paying the damages which such voluntary discharge of the water, by the public agents, should occasion to individuals. The agent of the state, in such a case, would inflict the mischief under the same impulse that he would act, who, during a conflagration, should demolish the house of his neighbor, to arrest the progress of destruction, and to prevent the flames from communicating to his own building.

The above hasty suggestions, are respectfully submitted to the wisdom of the legislature.

The comptroller, in obedience to a resolution of the Honorable the Assembly of the 16th instant, requesting him to report to that house, "a statement of the amount of monies paid towards the Champlain feeder, and the locks upon the same; and copies of all contracts relating to the construction of the said work, that may be in the comptroller's office;" respectfully reports:

That the accounts of the expenditures of the canal commissioners in his office, do not show clearly the amount of monies paid towards the "Champlain" (or Glen's Falls) feeder; but as nearly as can be ascertained from them, the accompanying statement marked A. gives the names of all persons to whom monies have been paid, and the several amounts paid to them.

There are but three contracts on file in this office, relating to the construction of the work, viz. that of J. Lyman Arms and Walter Geer, of R. M. Livingston and Thomas Wright, and of William M'Donald and Sylvester Rice; copies of which are annexed, marked B. C. and D.

Mr. Burt, from the committee on the establishment and improvement of roads and bridges and the incorporation of turnpike companies, to which was referred the petitions and remonstrance of inhabitants of Dutchess and Ulster, reported:

That the petitioners are so situated, as well as many more of our citizens, that much inconvenience is experienced by reason of their not being a bridge across the Rondout creek, near its junction with the Hudson river, in the county of Ulster.

The present method, as stated to the committee, is by a ferry, and that many times requires a loss of time which they wish to avoid, but cannot be overcome except by a toll-bridge; and when the risk is too great to be encountered, they are under the necessity of travelling several miles out of their way.

Those who remonstrate admit the necessity of a bridge, but recommend it be located further up the creek, representing that it will interfere with the navigation, if placed where the applicants desire.

By reference to a map furnished the committee, it will be perceived that the site fixed upon is about half way of the length of a dock built by the Hudson and Delaware canal company.

The agent of the Hudson and Delaware company appeared before the committee, and represented that it would not interfere with their privileges, and the interest of that company in the navigation of that creek, must be paramount to all others.

The greater doubt in the minds of the committee, as to the location that was proper to be recommended, was the difficulty that might arise in consequence of obstruction in the navigation. But from statements made to the committee, by persons supposed to be acquainted with difficulties which might arise, from bridges constructed with draws which can be raised in a very few minutes, they are convinced that it will not obstruct navigation to that degree which would counterbalance the accommodation of the public, in the location desired by applicants.

They have therefore prepared a bill, and directed their chairman to ask leave to introduce the same.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Ordered, That the report of the committee of the whole be laid upon the table.

The house then resolved itself into a committee of the whole, on the bill entitled "An act to incorporate the village of Brockport;" and after some time spent thereon, Mr. Speaker resumed the chair, and Mr. Bacon, from the said committee, reported, that the committee had gone through the said bill, and agreed to the same without amendment; which he was directed to report to the house, and he read the report in his place, and delivered the same in at the table, where it was again read.

Van Beuren, from the said committee, reported progress, and asked for and obtained leave to sit again.

And then the House adjourned until ten o'clock to-morrow morning.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 1829.

The remonstrance of the members of the Cortland medical society, remonstrating against the repeal or the alteration of the revised statutes regulating the practice of physic and surgery, was read, and referred to the committee of the whole, when on the bill on that subject.

Mr. Johnson, from the committee on canals and internal improvements, to whom was referred the petition of Henry Spencer and and others, relative to the Champlain feeder, reported:

The memorialists represent, that in 1826, a law was passed authorizing the canal commissioners to construct locks upon the Champlain canal, at a price not exceeding $25,000; that after much competition, a contract was entered into with a person for $24,900, who, having received $16,000, abandoned his contract; and that the legislature, at the session of 1828, made an additional appropriation of $18,000 to complete said work; and that on the 3d day of May last, the acting canal commissioner on the northern canal caused a notice of the letting of the job for constructing the locks and completing said feeder, to be given for the 30th of said May; that on said 30th May, numerous proposals were given in—among others, one from Sylvester Rice, for $22,300, and one from Meriam & Coleman, for $21,000; and that after various fraudulent artifices to prevent Messrs. Meriam & Coleman from obtaining the contract, the same was given to William McDonald, who had purchased from the said Rice his interest in the first mentioned proposal, whereby the state, they say, was defrauded to the amount of $1,300. They also represent that the contract has not been performed agreeably to the contract; and that the superintendent on that work is making repairs which belonged to the said contractors to do; and they conclude, by asking an investigation, and the contractors required to complete their contract, and the attorney-general directed to prosecute for the said sum of $1,300, and the public agents be restrained from squandering the public money, &c.

In relation to the first contract above referred to, it appears that a contract was entered into by Richard M. Livingston to complete the work for $24,000, and that he has received the sum of $16,000, and abandoned the work. For the sum advanced to him, however, abundant security was taken by the canal commissioners, as will appear by a reference to the comptroller's report hereunto annexed; and as the subject is now under advisement of the attorney-general, having been submitted to him by the canal board, the committee do not deem it necessary at present to adopt any legislative measures on the subject.

In relation to the next charge, that after various fraudulent artifices to prevent Meriam & Coleman obtaining the contract, it was given to Wm. McDonald, who had purchased from the said Sylvester Rice his interest in the above mentioned proposals, whereby the state was defrauded to the amount of $1,300, the committee deemed it necessary to call upon the canal commissioner, Mr. Bouck, and the superintendent, Mr. Van Nortwick, who were supposed to know all about the allegations made by the petitioners.

They both appeared before the committee, and their statements do not essentially differ. They state, that at the time appointed for receiving proposals, the two lowest proposals where security was offered were, one by Meriam and others at $21,000, and one by Rice (who agreed, by Mr. Bouck's consent, to associate McDonald with him) for $22,300. Rice and McDonald were ready with their security, but Meriam and his associates were not ready, their surety residing at Whitehall.

As their proposal was the lowest, Mr. Bouck entered into the following arrangement:—He signed both contracts, left them with Mr. Van Nortwick, the superintendent, with directions if he should receive the Meriam contract by a time agreed upon, (the next Saturday after the proposals were handed in) executed by the contractors, and surety named, the contract was to be delivered to them; otherwise, the contract with Rice and McDonald, which had been executed, was to be perfected.

The person who went with Meriam's contract to Whitehall, to obtain the security agreed upon, did not return until the time limited had expired, and Rice and McDonald had received their contract, although he arrived soon after. The subject was, however, shortly after examined by Mr. Bouck, before Rice and McDonald commenced their work, and it appeared, that although Meriam had obtained surety, he and his associates had not executed the contract themselves, but that they had endeavored to sell it in the market, for five hundred dollars.

The committee have no hesitation in saying, that the contract with Rice and McDonald was fairly made; that Mr. Bouck took every necessary precaution in perfecting the contracts for the work. It appears that the contractors have faithfully performed their contract, as far as they have progressed; and the same is nearly, if not quite completed.

The charge of the superintendent's expending the money of the state on the contract of Rice and McDonald, is expressly disproved by Mr. Bouck and the superintendent.

This view of the subject, renders it unnecessary to say any thing in relation to the request to have the attorney-general prosecute, as from the view the committee have taken of the subject, the contract was fairly entered into by Rice and McDonald.

There appearing to the committee no necessity for any legislative interference, so far as they have received information, they ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

Mr. Speaker put the question whether the house would agree to discharge the committee from the further consideration of the said petition, and it was determined in the affirmative.

Mr. Morell, from the committee on the incorporation of cities and villages, on the petition of the trustees of the village of Waterloo, praying for an amendment to the act incorporating said village, asked leave to report by bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Morell, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to incorporate the village of Waterloo in the county of Seneca;'" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Armstrong, from the committee on the erection and division of towns and counties, to which was referred the petition of sundry inhabitants of the town of Richmond in the county of Ontario, praying for a division of said town; also sundry remonstrances against such division; reported:

That the said town of Richmond embraces a territory about twelve miles in length, and six miles in breadth, and contained a population of upwards of three thousand inhabitants in the year 1825.

The petitioners represent, and it appears to the committee, that the territory is so extended, as to render the public meetings of the inhabitants for the transaction of the business of the town, troublesome; and that the interest and convenience of both parts of the town will be promoted by the division prayed for.

The committee have therefore prepared a bill according to the prayer of the petitioners, and instructed their chairman to ask leave to introduce the same.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Armstrong, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to divide the town of Richmond in the county of Ontario;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Armstrong, from the committee on the erection and division of towns and counties, to which was referred the petition of sundry inhabitants of the town of Clifton in the county of Saratoga, praying that the name of the town be altered to Clifton-Park, asked leave to report by bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Armstrong, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to alter the name of the town of Clifton in the county of Saratoga;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Spier, from the committee on claims, to which was referred the petition of John Gifford, praying compensation for military services during the revolutionary war, reported:

That from the vouchers which have been laid before the committee, it appears that the said John Gifford was at Fort-Ann, under the command of Capt. Adiel Sherwood, in the year 1780; which place was attacked on the 10th day of October in the same year, by a body of British forces commanded by Major Carlton, when the said Gifford was made a prisoner, carried to Canada, and imprisoned about two years and two months. And it further appears, as reported in the Journal of the Assembly in the year 1805, page 29, that owing to a mistake, (said to be in Capt. Sherwood's pay roll,) the said John Gifford received but thirteen months' pay; leaving still due him the pay for the term of thirteen months, for which he now claims compensation.

The committee are of opinion that the claims of the petitioner are just and equitable, and ought to be granted; and have directed their chairman to prepare a bill, and to ask leave to introduce the same.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Spier, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act for the relief of John Gifford;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Dickson, from the committee appointed under the 47th rule of this house, to whom was referred the bill entitled "An act to lay out and improve a road through the Buffalo Indian reservation in the county of Erie," reported:

That they have examined said bill; and that a majority of the committee are of opinion that it is a bill coming within the ninth section of the seventh article of the amended constitution of this state, and requires the assent of two-thirds of the members elected to each branch of the legislature to pass the same.

Mr. Speaker put the question whether the house would agree with the committee in their said report, and it was determined in the affirmative.

Mr. Dana, from the select committee to which was referred the engrossed bill from the Senate, entitled "An act to continue in force an act relative to the court for the trial of impeachments and the correction of errors, passed January 26th, 1825," reported, that the committee have examined the said bill, and see no reason why the same should not be passed into a law.

Ordered, That the said bill be committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Jenkins, from the select committee to which was referred the engrossed bill from the Senate, entitled "An act relative to the county courts of the county of Onondaga," reported, that they have examined the said bill, and see no reason why the same should not be passed into a law.

Ordered, That the said bill be committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Dyckman, from the select committee to which was referred the bill entitled "An act relating to the appointment of public notaries, commissioners of deeds, and masters and examiners in chancery, in the city of New-York," reported:

That they have had the said bill under consideration, and can see no reason why the same should not be passed into a law.

The provisions of the revised statutes limit the number of those officers in the city of New-York, far below what the wants of its citizens require; and the committee can see no just reason why, in the city of New-York, the number of commissioners of deeds, public notaries, and masters and examiners in chancery, should be fixed so small, when in every other section of the state, their number is either unlimited, or fixed at what would be nearly ten times that allowed for the city of New-York, in proportion to its number of inhabitants.

The committee, therefore, under these impressions, and with a firm conviction that the inhabitants of the city of New-York would be materially benefited by it, recommend the passage of the bill.

Ordered, That the said bill and report be recommitted to a committee of the whole, and that it be restored to its original number on the general order.

Mr. Graves, from the select committee to whom was referred the petition of Stephen Coal and others, praying for the passage of a law authorising him to build a dam across the Canisteo river, reported:

That it appears to the committee, that the only object which the petitioners have in view, is to erect a dam across said river, in order to furnish certain mills by them erecting, with a sufficient supply of water, which cannot be obtained without such dam: That the extension of mill privileges thereon by enactments, properly securing to the public the navigation of said stream, will, in the opinion of the committee, greatly conduce to the permanent benefit of the country. They are therefore of opinion that the prayer of the petitioners ought to be granted, and have prepared a bill accordingly, which they have instructed their chairman to ask leave to introduce.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Graves, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act authorising Stephen Coal to erect a dam across the Canisteo river, in the town of Addison in the county of Steuben;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Johnson gave notice that he would, on some future day, ask leave to introduce a bill, confirming the reports of the trustees of certain school districts in this state, for the year one thousand eight hundred and twenty-eight.

Mr. Eldridge offered for the consideration of the house, a resolution, in the words following, to wit:

Resolved, That a committee of nine members be appointed, whose duty it shall be to examine all bills from time to time committed to a committee of the whole house, and report all such bills as in their opinion may with safety and propriety be referred to select committees to be reported complete; but that no bill shall be recommended to be referred, except with the unanimous consent of said committee.

Ordered, That the said resolution be laid upon the table.

Mr. Skinner offered for the consideration of the house, a resolution, in the words following, to wit:

Resolved, That for the remainder of the session, Fridays and Saturdays of each week be appropriated to the consideration of private and local bills.

Ordered, That the said resolution be laid upon the table.

The engrossed bill entitled "An act to lay out and improve a road through the Buffalo Indian reservation in the county of Erie," was read the third time.

Mr. Speaker put the question whether the house would agree to the final passage of the said bill, and it was determined in the affirmative, two-thirds of all the members elected to this house voting in favor thereof, as follows, to wit:

Resolved, (if the Assembly concur,) That after the present session, the journals of the Senate and Assembly, shall be printed in the above form and size, and with the above type; and no document or paper which had previously been printed, shall be reprinted therein; nor shall any message, report, communication or other document be printed in the journals, but the same shall be referred to in the journals by number, or in some other convenient manner.

Resolved, (if the Assembly concur,) That twenty-three copies of the documents and reports, in addition to the usual number, shall be printed; twelve of which shall be delivered to the clerks of the Senate and Assembly, for the use of their respective houses; and the remainder shall be distributed with the journals of the two houses, agreeable to law.

Ordered, That the said resolutions be laid upon the table.

Mr. Al Burtis, from the committee on the incorporation of charitable and religious societies, to which was referred the petition of the Orphan asylum society in the city of New-York, reported:

That it appears from the petition, that said society was incorporated by an act of the legislature, passed April 7th, 1807, which expired on the first of March last. Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Al Burtis, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to revive an act entitled 'An act to incorporate the Orphan asylum society in the city of New-York;'" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

That they have had the petitions and the remonstrance under consideration; and it appears to the committee, that there is territory enough comprised within the two towns, to make three convenient towns. It also appears, that almost all the inhabitants residing in the territory intended to be embraced in the contemplated new town, have signed the petition.

The principal objection made by the remonstrants, is that a large stream runs through the town, on which there are expensive bridges to be kept in repair; and that their burthens will be increased by a division. But the committee are of opinion that their objections are not well founded, as the bridges complained of will fall into the contemplated new town, and rather diminish than increase their expenses.

The committee think the prayer of the petition reasonable, and that it ought to be granted; and ask leave to introduce a bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Armstrong, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to erect a new town from parts of the towns of Portland and Ripley in the county of Chautauque;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Armstrong, from the committee on the erection and division of towns and counties, to which was referred the petition of sundry inhabitants of the towns of Pomfret and Villenova in the county of Chautauque, praying for the erection of a new town from parts of said towns, asked for leave to report by bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Armstrong, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to erect the town of Arkwright in the county of Chautauque;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Savage, from the select committee to which were referred sundry memorials from citizens of the counties of Oswego, Oneida, Onondaga and Madison, praying for the passage of a law providing for the lowering of the Oneida lake, and improving the navigation of the Oneida river; together with the report of the canal commissioners, to whom a reference of the subject had been made by this house; reported:

That the committee have entered upon an examination of the subject referred to them, with that consideration which its importance requires. That the Oneida lake, bordering upon the counties in which the petitioners reside, is a beautiful sheet of water, extending east and west a distance of twenty-two miles, and it affords a sufficient depth of water at all times for inland boats of any size: that the lake is supplied with water by many streams of considerable magnitude; and amongst the number is Wood creek, emptying into the lake at its eastern extremity, and which originally constituted a part of the western inland lock navigation.

The outlet of this lake forms the Oneida river. This river forms a junction with the Seneca river, at a place called Three River Point, after meandering though the country a distance of eighteen miles, and the improvement of the navigation of this river, and the consequent reduction of the waters of the lake, is what is sought by the petitioners.

The committee find, by a reference to the first volume of the canal laws, page 14, in a report made by Mr. Geddes to the surveyor-general, in pursuance to concurrent resolutions of the two houses of the legislature, that "the rapid at the west end of the Oneida lake, falls not quite 18 inches, and there is something over a foot more of fall to the Caughanoy reef, making only thirty inches that Oneida lake can be lowered very easily, The whole of the descent in the river, as given by Mr. Geddes, is in the following words:

To the lake reef,	$\frac{1}{4}$	mile,	$1\frac{1}{2}$	foot fall.
head of Caughanoy reef,	$3\frac{1}{2}$	"	1	"
Caughanoy reef.	$\frac{1}{2}$	"	$3\frac{1}{2}$	"
head of Oak Orchard reef,	5	"	$\frac{2}{3}$	"
Oak Orchard reef,	$\frac{3}{4}$	"	$2\frac{1}{4}$	"
the bottom of Oak Point reef,	2	"	1	"
Three River Point,	6	"	$1\frac{2}{3}$	"
Add for the rise of water while levelling down,			$\frac{11}{12}$	"
	18		$12\frac{1}{2}$	ft. fall.

The canal commissioners, in their report, say, that after cutting down the reefs near the lake, the erection of one or two dams, and the same number of locks, would, they apprehend, accomplish the object of the petitioners.

The committee, from all the information they have derived connected with this work, cannot entertain a doubt about its practicability, or that it is incumbent upon the state to engage in the undertaking. Considerable quantities of land owned by the state, and lying at the eastern end of Oneida lake, are now wholly out of the market, in consequence of being partially inundated, and so wholly saturated by the waters of the lake, as to render them unfit for cultivation. This, as a general remark, may be said to be the characteristic of the country bordering upon the lake; and although the counties in which these lands lie, have been settled for many years, the territory thus situated is not more than half settled.

Some of these lands owned by the state, have been sold to individuals who were induced to adventure into that wet and sickly region, under the anticipation that the western inland navigation company's communication would be the grand navigable thoroughfare leading from the eastern to the western parts of the state: In this anticipation they were strengthened by various proceedings of the legislature in relation to that work.

So early as the year 1810, commissioners were appointed for the purpose of exploring the whole route of the inland navigation from Hudson's river to Lake Ontario and Lake Erie, with the view to improve and complete them on a scale commensurate to the great advantages to be derived from the accomplishment of that important object: And they were also directed to examine into the practicability and the effects of removing the bar and deepening the channel at the outlet of the Oneida lake. Induced by such considerations, hardy and adventurous settlers advanced upon these unwholesome lands, fondly looking forward to the time when the lowering of the waters of the lake would convert their almost unimproveable territory into a fertile district: In this their hopes and justly excited expectations, they were disappointed. The construction of the Erie canal at once removed from them the prospect of a location upon the main channel of intercourse between the Hudson river and the lakes, and also destroyed the probable event, that by a dense population they would be enabled to reclaim that territory, and render it valuable.

In addition to the important measure of reclaiming a considerable territory of valuable land, the committee view it as a matter of paramount importance, that measures should be taken to arrest the progress of disease which is constantly and daily working its ravages amongst the inhabitants residing upon the shores of the lake and the streams emptying into it. Many of our citizens have invested their all in these lands, and cherishing the hope from year to year, that measures would be taken to reduce the waters of the lake, they have held on to their purchases to be again and again disappointed, until forced to abandon them by the sure and fatal progress of disease. The committee are satisfied from the representation made to them, that death is almost an every day companion of the inhabitants of this section of country, and is in a great measure to be attributed to the pestilential vapours engendered in the marshes and low grounds in the vicinity of the lake, which can only be removed by lowering the lake, as proposed by the petitioners. The salutary influence which the lowering of the Onondaga lake has produced upon the health of the inhabitants on its borders, would undoubtedly be felt by those in similar situations. Impressed with these views, the efforts of the petitioners are chiefly directed to this point; and the improvement of the navigation, although much desired, is still a secondary object: and the committee are constrained to say, that not only has the state neglected to take measures calculated to alleviate their sufferings, but by granting authority to contruct a dam at Caughanoy reef, they have aided essentially in promoting them; a dam located at that reef producing the inevitable effect of backing water into the lake, and increasing the evil of which before that they had grievous cause to complain.

The committee are satisfied, from the opinion expressed by the canal commissioners, and from their own knowledge of the subject, that the effects of rendering the Oneida river navigable, will be beneficial rather than injurious to the canal revenue: And when it is taken into consideration that the granting the prayer of the petitioners will produce the happy result of alleviating the distresses of a portion of our citizens—will bring into market an extensive and fertile territory, which is now uninhabitable—and will open a communication by which the immense quantities of wood, which are now in a state of constant destruction on the shores of the Oneida lake, can be conveyed to the salt works at Salina, and diminish the expense attending the manufacture of salt; certainly a desirable object to the state, inasmuch as she receives into her treasury one shilling on every bushel manufactured at these works. By making this improvement, you, on the one hand, present to an industrious and enterprising portion of your citizens, prospects of health, happiness and prosperity; and on the other, you make an investment which will give you ample and rich returns for the money advanced. They are of the opinion that the application should be granted.

They have accordingly prepared a bill, and instructed their chairman to ask leave to introduce the same.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Savage, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act authorising the canal commissioners to lower the Oneida lake, and improve the navigation of the Oneida river;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Ordered, That the usual number of copies of the said bill and report be printed for the use of the legislature.

Mr. Burt, from the select committee to which was referred the engrossed bill from the Senate, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to incorporate the Cohoes bridge company,' passed April 4th, 1806," reported, that they have examined the said bill, and see no reason why the same should not be passed into a law.

Ordered, That the said bill be committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Johnson, from the select committee to which was referred the engrossed bill from the Senate, entitled "An act to change the name and style of the First Welsh Methodist society of the town of Steuben," reported, that they have examined the said bill, and see no reason why the same should not be passed into a law.

Mr. Starr, from the select committee to which was referred the engrossed bill from the Senate, entitled "An act extending the time for the collection of taxes in the city of Albany," reported, that they have examined the said bill, prepared amendments thereto, with which they see no reason why the same should not be passed into a law.

Thereupon,

By unanimous consent, the said bill was ordered to a third reading.

In pursuance of previous notice, Mr. Johnson asked for and obtained leave to bring in a bill entitled "An act confirming the reports of the trustees of certain school districts in this state;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Smith asked for and obtained leave to bring in a bill entitled "An act concerning the printing of legal notices in the city and county of New-York;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Burt, from the committee on the establishment and improvement of roads and bridges, and the incorporation of turnpike companies, on the petition of sundry inhabitants of the town of Manheim in the county of Herkimer, asked leave to report by bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Burt, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to appoint commissioners to lay out a road in the town of Manheim in the county of Herkimer;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

A message from the Governor, delivered by his private secretary, was read, in the words following, to wit:

Ordered, That the said bill and amendment be committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Randall, from the select committee to which were referred the petitions of the New-York and Central asylums, for the instruction of deaf and dumb in this state, reported:

That they have endeavored to give the subject that attention which its importance demands. On the propriety of educating this unfortunate class of our fellow-beings, the committee believe there is no diversity of opinion in the public mind, either in or out of the legislative body. On that subject, therefore, they deem it unnecessary to bestow either time or labor.

The subject of educating the deaf mutes, is not of a local kind: It is as general, as the territory is wide, over which they are scattered; nor can their wants be supplied by circumscribed means. Wherever one of them exists, he carries with him, in his listless and melancholy degradation, a most affecting appeal to the sympathies and humanity of all who behold him. The gloom which shrouds their intellect, calls loudly for the kind offices of the christian and the philanthropist, and for public benefaction to rescue them from the darkness of perpetual ignorance.

From the several acts of the legislature of this state, making direct and indirect appropriations to the two institutions, and from the reports of the respective institutions for the years 1827 and 1828, (which are very full,) the following facts appear:

In 1817, the legislature incorporated the New-York institution. In 1819, they gave to this institution $10,000; and in 1821, $2,500. In 1822, they made provision for the instruction at the New-York asylum, of 32 indigent pupils, 4 from each senatorial district, at $150 each per annum, to be paid by the treasurer of the state on the warrant of the comptroller, for four years; which provision has been extended by a subsequent act.

The aggregate amount of monies received by the directors for the benefit of this institution, since 1819 inclusive, is,

From the venders of lottery tickets,.....	$25,379 41
And from the treasury by way of direct and indirect appropriations, ...	49,256 50
Making an aggregate of.....	$74,635 91

The sum of $10,000, part of the above amount, was granted by an act passed March 23d, 1827, for building an asylum in the city of New-York; on condition, however, that the directors should raise an equal sum for the same purpose. This condition has been complied with; the monies have been expended as was contemplated by the act, and the committee believe in a judicious manner.

For more full, and very satisfactory information on this subject, the committee beg leave to refer this honorable body to the ninth annual report of the directors of this benevolent institution.

Over and above the patronage above mentioned, the directors have received annually from the hands of benevolent individuals and private associations, by way of benefits, donations and subscriptions, very liberal aid.

From these sources they received in 1827, ...	$3,596 08
And in 1828,.....	3,975 25
Making an aggregate of	$7,571 33

in two years.

This circumstance, the committee are pleased to state, while it increases the ability of the directors to carry into effect their benevolent designs, also increases the force of their claims on the munificence of the legislature.

There were in this institution, on the 31st December, 1828, of

State pupils, ...	32
Pupils supported by a female association, ...	4
Pay and part pay pupils,.....	13
Supported by private charities,.....	15
Supported for services, ...	1
Total.....	65

The talent and enterprise of the directors of this institution, aided by that spirit of liberality which so eminently distinguishes the inhabitants of that city, if seconded by a corresponding liberality on the part of the legislature, leave no doubt of the growing usefulness and future celebrity of the school. For the character of the teachers, the mode of instruction, and the present condition of the school, the committee beg leave to refer your honorable body to the annual reports of 1827 and 1828.

It is here also proper to remark, that the appropriation of $10,000 by the legislature of 1827, to aid in the erection of buildings at New-York, was evidently done with an intention to continue and increase their provision for the reception of indigent pupils in that institution.

In 1823, the legislature of this state passed an act for incorporating the Central asylum in Canajoharie, and appropriated $1,000; of which sum, $300 was to be applied towards erecting an asylum, and the remaining $700 to be applied to the support of indigent deaf and dumb pupils. This sum the committee are satisfied was faithfully and economically applied, according to the intent of the act. A small but commodious building of brick, near the centre of a lot of about three acres of ground, to which the directors had previously acquired title, was erected; appurtenant to which, a convenient wood-house has been erected. The building is estimated to be worth $1,400, erected on an eligible site, in a pleasant and healthy country, one-third of a mile from, and in fair view of a stage road leading from Cherry-Valley to the Erie canal, on which a mail stage passes and repasses regularly twice in every week. It is also situated four miles from the Great Western turnpike, and seven miles from Canajoharie village, on the Erie canal.

The directors of the Central asylum, owing to the expense of building, hire of teachers, and other contingent expenses, found themselves involved in debt $800 on account of the institution. In 1825, they made a report to the legislature of the condition of the school, and their indebtedness on its account; in which session an act was passed, giving the institution $800 for the disbursing of their debt, and at the same time made provision for the support of two indigent pupils from each senatorial district, to be educated at this asylum, at the rate of $80 per annum for each, for five years.

Of the debt of $800 above mentioned, $500 was created on account of the building of the asylum. It appears, therefore, that the state has given $300 towards the building in the years 1823 and 1825; and that the remaining $600 for the same purpose, was raised by private subscription and donations. A part of the lot of land owned by the corporation, was given by an individual, and the remainder purchased by the directors.

It appears from the annual reports of the directors for 1826, 1827 and 1828, that more than the average number of 30 pupils for each of those years, have been instructed at this asylum. The aggregate amount of money received from the state by direct and indirect appropriations, from its first commencement, is only $6,880.

It appears from the last report, there are in this institution:

Of state pupils, ...	16
Of pay do	13
Total, ...	29

It also appears from the several reports of the three preceding years, as well as from the report of the honorable secretary of state, who visited this school in the fall of 1827, that the funds which have been placed in the hands of the directors, have been economically and beneficially applied; and that the pupils have made satisfactory progress in learning, under the care and instruction of faithful and competent teachers. The principal is a graduate of Union college; and has the reputation of being a good classical scholar. Mr. Backus, one of the assistants, is a deaf mute, educated at the Hartford asylum, and has been a teacher three years or more. He is a young gentleman of acknowledged talents, and a good teacher of the sign language. Mr. C. Bowman, the other assistant, has had six years' experience as a teacher, and is a faithful, industrious, and intelligent man.

The pupils at the Central asylum have hitherto been supported for $80 per annum; but the committee are of opinion that this scanty sum requires a degree of rigid economy on the part of the directors, bordering on parsimony.

Considering the scanty means afforded this institution, it would seem no school of the kind could have done more, or spread more widely the benefits of this mode of instruction.

Applications are frequently made, and constantly pending, for the admission of indigent deaf mutes, which are refused, in consequence of want of means to support them.

The mode of instruction is the same as that of the Hartford asylum.

The directors of this institution now address the legislature, praying for pecuniary aid, to enable them to enlarge the building for instruction, and to erect buildings to accommodate the pupils with board and lodging, and the residence of the superintendent, and also to make provision for the support of an additional number of indigent pupils from each senatorial district in this state.

The petition of the directors of the New-York institution, is for the passage of a law for the support of an increased number of indigent mutes, to be sent to this institution, and to be selected and supported in like manner as those at present received, with an extension of the act previously passed for that purpose.

The committee are of opinion that both these are meritorious applications.

The only questions on this subject, in the opinion of the committee, about which there can exist any serious diversity of sentiment, are, first, whether there ought to be more than one institution of the kind in the state? And if so, whether a second one should have been located in Canajoharie? In considering which, the following questions naturally arise for consideration:

1. What is the number of deaf and dumb persons in this state, within the ages fit for instruction?
2. What is their condition, and where are they?
3. What are the objects of educating them?
4. What are the comparative advantages of a city and country location?
5. Would the greatest good be effected by confining the patronage of the state to one institution?

There were in this state, according to the census of 1825, 645 deaf mutes; of this number, it is estimated 322 are within the ages proper for instruction. This number, it is presumed, has since increased proportionably with the general increase of population of the state. They are nearly equally scattered over every part of the state, and are to be found in every direction. It is calculated that at least five-sixths of them are indigent, and without the means of education, except those means be furnished by public munificence or private benefaction.

The object of educating the deaf mutes, is not to fit them for statesmen or rulers in any of the departments of government, nor for any of the learned professions—this is rendered impossible from the very nature of their misfortune—but it is to fit them for transacting the ordinary business of life; to make them acceptable and useful members of society; to enable them to think and act with propriety, in all things pertaining to their present condition and future destiny; and to remove them from a world of cheerless gloom, to that of social enjoyment. After their education shall have been completed, their lives will most probably be spent in the pursuit of agriculture or the mechanic arts, and generally in the humble walks of life among their friends in the country; their education, therefore, should be directed in reference to these objects.

The committee are of opinion, that a city and country location have each advantages peculiar to themselves, and each disadvantages not common to both. The former is more accessible to the visitation of persons of talent, wealth and leisure, and more favorable for the accumulation of funds by benefits, donations and individual contributions. Distress and misfortune, in order to be relieved, must first be known; and the actual view of wants at hand, produces a more sensible effect upon the feelings of the benevolent, than the story told of objects of charity at a distance.

But although funds may be acquired by these means in the city with more facility than in the country, yet the necessity for those funds is created to a very considerable extent, in consequence of the expense of supporting pupils in the city being greater than in the country. The deaf mute receives the greater portion of his simple ideas through the medium of the eye. In the city will be seen a greater variety of the productions of art; in the country, a greater variety, and a fresher view of the works of nature. Each imparts their appropriate instruction.

Whether those notions of fashionable life which the pupil would acquire in the city or town during the progress of his education, would be fitted to the space he is destined to fill in society afterwards, depends more on the choice of his place of residence, than on his choice of occupation.

If a pupil is taken from humble life, and educated with a view to agricultural pursuits, or some mechanical employment in the country, that would seem the better place for his education, where he would have the greatest opportunity to make himself familiar with those occupations he is to follow, and with that kind of society among which he is to spend his life.

If the circle of society to which the pupils are to be limited during their tutelage, shall be supposed to be composed of the superintendent, the teachers and their families, and the visiting committees, then in this respect neither has a great advantage over the other.

The manner of conducting the concerns of an institution of this kind, as well as the mode of instruction, is far different from that adopted in those literary institutions, on the reputation of which depends the character of the country for literature and science.

In the colleges and universities of this country, a professor of philosophy, chemistry, &c. may as well lecture to a hundred pupils as to ten. Hence the expense of education may relatively diminish, as the number of students increase; and hence the danger of rivalship, by establishing colleges in the way of each other. But in schools for the education of mutes, this is not true to the same extent. Twenty is supposed the greatest number that can well be taught by one instructor. Hence an addition of every twenty pupils, gives rise to the necessity of an additional teacher. The committee are not, therefore, aware that any great advantages can be derived from the assemblage of a great number of these unfortunate mutes in the same school.

The provisions already made for the education of indigent deaf mutes, embraces but a comparatively small number of those now uneducated in the state.

The committee are of opinion that a greater number of this class now within the ages fit for instruction, will be educated, and the advantages of this system of education more generally and economically diffused, by continuing the patronage of the state to the Central asylum, (for a few years longer at least,) than by suspending the operations of that at once, and providing for the whole at New-York.

There are a variety of reasons why the state pupils at the Central asylum would never go to New-York, if the provision were ever so ample there. It is also to be observed, that the pay pupils at the Central asylum, if they were obliged to be removed to New-York, must go there in the character of state pupils, in consequence of the increase of expense, and the greater distance from their parental residence. This appears evident, from the fact that there is now a greater number of entire pay pupils at the former, than at the latter place.

If the question were now for the first time to be agitated, where would be the most fit place for the location of an institution of this kind, which should have the exclusive patronage of the state? the committee are by no means prepared to say that Canajoharie would be that place. They are of opinion that it will be a more proper time to discuss that question, when all now within the ages proper for instruction, shall have received the benefits of this system of education; and when there shall be none in the state to be educated, except such as are now too young, and those who shall annually arrive at an age fit for receiving instruction.

Under a view of all the circumstances of the case, the committee are of opinion that the prayer of the petitioners from both institutions, ought, to a certain extent, to be granted; and have instructed their chairman to bring in a bill accordingly.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Randall, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act extending and supplementary to certain acts providing for the indigent deaf and dumb in this state,' passed April 1st, 1825;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Ordered, That the usual number of copies of the said bill and report be printed for the use of the legislature.

Mr. Edgerton, from the select committee to which was referred the petition of the inhabitants of the town of Peru, reported:

That the facts, as set forth by the petitioners, are as follows:

That at the last annual town-meeting in said town, a vote was taken to apply five hundred dollars in the hands of the overseers of the poor in said town, to the rebuilding and repairing a bridge across the Au Sable river at Keeseville. The said sum of five hundred dollars is useless in the hands of the said overseers, in consequence of abolishing the distinction between town and county poor.

The committee are of the opinion that the prayer of the petitioners ought to be granted, and ask leave to introduce a bill accordingly.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Edgerton, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to authorise the overseers of the poor in the town of Peru, to pay over the monies in their hands to the commissioners of highways of said town;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Chandler, from the select committee to which was referred the engrossed bill from the Senate, entitled "An act concerning the gospel and school lot in the town of Chenango in the county of Broome," reported, that they have examined the said bill, and see no reason why the same should not be passed into a law.

Ordered, That the said bill be committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Mann, from the select committee to which was referred the petition of Thomas Perry and James Perry, aliens, reported:

That the petitioners set forth, that they are the sole devisees and heirs at law of James Perry, late of the county of Stafford in the kingdom of Great Britain: That Miles Sherbrook, late of the city of New-York, being largely indebted unto the said James Perry, conveyed to William Popham, esquire, and John Mowatt junior, certain lots of land in the county of Herkimer, in the whole 3,907 acres, in trust, to be sold, and the proceeds to be paid to the said James Perry: That the same lands were afterwards sold to Simeon Ford, late of Herkimer, and the purchase money secured by a mortgage, which the said Simeon is now unable to pay. These representations are verified. They therefore ask to be permitted to purchase the said lands, on a sale by virtue of the mortgage, in order to prevent a great sacrifice of their interests, and to hold and convey the same to purchasers, not exceeding 4,000 acres.

Such privileges have frequently been granted to foreign creditors; and the committee are not aware of any injury from such grants, provided that a period is limited beyond which they shall not hold under such grants: And they request leave to introduce a bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Mann, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to enable Thomas Perry and James Perry, aliens, to take, hold, and convey certain real estate;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

A communication from the canal board, was read, in the words following, to wit:

The canal board, to which has been referred, by the honorable the Assembly, the petition of Darius Eggleston, praying that a law may be passed authorising this board "to settle and adjust the claims of the petitioner upon just and equitable principles," respectfully report:

That these claims of the petitioner are predicated upon the fact, that on the 7th day of September, 1817, he entered into a contract with the canal commissioners "to grub, clear, excavate, embank and construct, in a good, substantial and workman-like manner, all that part of the Erie canal which lies between the western termination of section number twenty-two, and a point in section number twenty-one, situated twenty-seven chains westerly, as the canal line runs, from the eastern termination of the section last mentioned; the length of line included in this contract being about two miles eleven chains and fifty-five links," for certain specific prices, for each part of the work, particularly specified in the contract. The petitioner entered upon and completed this job to the acceptance of the engineer and canal commissioners, and was paid the prices agreed upon.

But his contract was not thus closed, although the contract was (as it is believed all or nearly all the canal contracts have been) broad in its terms, and bound him to make this canal, without attempting to specify the character of the excavation or of any other part of the work. Yet at that time, the canal commissioners possessed the power to make equitable allowances to any contractor, in case they should judge such allowances proper and merited. The petitioner after his work was completed, claimed the exercise of this discretion of the commissioners, and it was extended to his case. Benjamin Wright, Esq., the then acting engineer upon this part of the canal, made an estimate of the value of the work, exceeding in amount the contract prices for the same work, by the sum of $1,651 07. This excess was mostly produced by extra allowances per yard upon excavation, in consequence of its having been more difficult or of a different character from that contemplated by the parties to the contract. Upon the receipt of this extra allowance, and of the full contract price of the work, the contract was finally closed, and the receipt in full of the petitioner, upon the bottom of the engineer's corrected estimate of the work, after its completion, was taken. This receipt in full bears date on the 9th day of November, 1819. A copy of this contract, of the estimate of the engineer, upon which the final payment was made, and of the petitioners receipt, are annexed to this report, from which papers the foregoing facts are ascertained.

Under these circumstances, the petitioner, on the 14th day of the present month, presented to this board his petition, praying the board to make him extra allowances upon the work covered by this contract, in consequence of his disappointment in the character and cost of the work. His petition was read and considered, and the following entry made upon the journals of the board, will show to the House the disposition made by this board of the petitioner's claim.

"At a meeting of the canal board at the comptroller's office, canal room, 14th February, 1829, the petition of Darius Eggleston was presented and read, when the original contract of the said Eggleston, and under which he claims extra allowances, being found on file in the comptroller's office, accompanied by an estimate of Benjamin Wright as engineer, of the amount and value of the work done, and the receipt in full of Eggleston for the amount of that estimate; and it appearing from a comparison of the contract prices of the work with that estimate, that extra allowances to the amount of $1,651 07 were made to Eggleston, the payment of which, as well as the contract prices, is evidenced by his receipt; it was

"Resolved, That inasmuch as the canal commissioners, at the date of this receipt, possessed full power, by law, to make extra allowance to contractors upon the canal, and as the canal commissioners did, in settling and closing the contract of the petitioner, exercise this power, and did award and pay extra allowances to him, this board consider the claims of the petitioner for extra allowances under this contract, as adjudicated and finally settled, and that the board have not the power to open the case or to review such decision of the canal commissioners."

Here the board may have accomplished the purpose intended by the House in referring this petition to them. But inasmuch as this is not the only case which has come before this board, under circumstances precisely similar to those which have governed the decision of the board in this case, and inasmuch as the question presented, and which the board have assumed to decide, is one of the most serious importance, in its consequences upon the interests of the state, they believe it to be their duty to make to the House such suggestions as have occurred to them in corroboration of their construction of their legal powers, and in relation to the policy of extending the provisions of the law so as to embrace within their powers cases like the present.

All the laws relating to the canals, previous to the session of the legislature in 1825, were considered to vest in the canal commissioners the power to allow to contractors upon the canals a compensation beyond the prices stipulated by their contracts, in all cases where the commissioners should consider such allowance proper. This power was given to the commissioners without restriction. It was therefore to be exercised by them judicially, and was limited only by their judgment and discretion. These officers, from the very manner in which their constant duties were to be performed, possessed peculiar faculties for ascertaining the facts in each particular case. The manner in which they should satisfy themselves of these facts, upon an application for extra allowances, was not pointed out by the law, but was left to their discretion, and from the facts, however ascertained, their judgments, as to the question and amount of allowance, were of course to be formed. But when the application was made, the facts examined, and they had passed upon the case, it must be supposed that the law under which they acted, contemplated that their decision should be final and conclusive, as no appeal to any other tribunal was provided.

The state being one of the parties to these awards, a resort to the legislature would of course always be admissible. But have the legislature, by any former or by any existing law, intended to empower any body, other than their own, to review these decisions, and to re-try the claims settled by them? In 1825, the legislature passed the act for the construction of the Cayuga and Seneca canal, and in the last section of that act, expressly provided that no allowances should be made by any authority, beyond the contract prices of the work. In the same year, the act relative to the Oswego canal was passed, and contained the same provision. In 1826, the law was passed organizing this board, and its language in relation to extra allowances, is as follows:

"No allowance shall hereafter be made to any contractor, upon any contract hereafter to be made, over and above the contract price for performing any work or labor upon any canal within this state, unless directed by the canal board."

Here is an express restriction of all the power granted to the board to contracts made after the passage of the law. In 1827, the provision of the law of of 1826, above recited, was extended "to all contracts made in the year 1825, under the laws which authorise the construction of a canal between Fort Edward and the Saratoga Falls, and the improvements on the Oswego river," with two important restrictive provisos, to wit: "that the extra expenses incurred, should have been occasioned by directions given by a canal commissioner or engineer, after the making of the contract, or in consequence of the work proving to be of a different character and description from that contemplated by the commissioner or engineer at the time of making the contract, and that no such allowance should be made unless as between individual and individual, the same would be recoverable in a court of equity." Here was an extension of the principle of extra allowances in a very restricted form, and to a very small portion of contracts made before the passage of the law of 1826. The legislature have not, therefore, up to this time, shown any disposition to extend, but rather to restrict, this power of granting extra allowances.

In 1828, it is believed no important change was made in the legislation upon this subject; but on the first day of January of that year, the revised statutes, embracing the provisions under which this board now act, became the law upon the subject. These provisions are but a revision of the restricted power contained in the first proviso to the enactment of 1827, without its particular application to the contracts mentioned in that law. To suppose, therefore, that by this revised provision, the legislature intended to extend the powers of this board beyond any powers before granted to the canal commissioners, and to authorise it to review decisions made by those officers while in the possession of far broader powers than any claimed for the canal board, would be to assume a latitude in the construction of the revised statutes, palpably contradictory to the policy of every law of which this is the revision, and equally inconsistent with what is believed to be the established rules of legal construction, and what has ever been the undisturbed authority of judicial decision.

So much for the reasons which have induced this board to say, that they have not the authority to open, review and re-try the case of the petitioner. But the prayer of the petition is, that the legislature will confer upon the board this authority. It is, therefore, not considered intrusive to make one suggestion in reference to the policy of granting this prayer.

The contract of the petitioner, it will be seen by its date, was one of the earliest made upon the canals.

From 1817 to 1825, and during nearly the whole of the construction of the Erie and Champlain canals, the same law, as to extra allowances, prevailed, and one uniform mode of closing and finally settling contracts was pursued by the canal commissioners, and that mode was the one pursued in settling this contract. If then a general law is to be passed authorising this board to entertain cases like this, not a single contract, in the whole of those great works, can be considered as settled. The number of applications cannot be foreseen or anticipated; and the amount of allowances, which proof, collected at this distant day, and by unfortunate contractors, (for there is no one to collect proof on the part of the state,) would compel the canal board to make, might be alarming to the prosperity of that fund, which, as yet, has given confidence to our canalling system.

The board have found, from their experience in the investigation of these claims, that the only safety to the state is in having present and using as a witness the acting engineer, whose business it was to examine the work upon which the allowance is claimed. If the board have been correct in this conclusion, it should not be forgotten by the house, that the engineers employed by the state in the early part of the construction of the canals, have been called to other parts of the country, and are now without the reach of the state, to be used to elicit the truth in relation to the work done under these old contracts, which they have immediately superintended. This would leave the decision, should these contracts be now opened for re-examination, to depend upon the proof to be derived from the hands employed by the claiming contractor, and many of whom are necessarily very imperfect judges of the value of the work upon which themselves were employed. If then, in cases of equal proof, the natural tendency of an award is against the public, and in favor of the individual claimant, it is not a forcible inference to suppose, that when the proof must be nearly ex parte, the interests of the state must and would suffer.

These suggestions are made to the house with the utmost respect, and under the apprehension that it may be proposed to pass a general law, giving to this board, or to some other tribunal, authority to open these old contracts, and to re-examine the justice of the final settlement of them by the canal commissioners.

That the legislature have entire power over this whole matter, the canal board do not pretend to doubt; and that there may be individual cases in which they may wisely exercise this power, in a further allowance to a single contractor, is more than possible. The determination of this point is cheerfully left, as it necessarily must be left, to the wisdom of those who may be called to act upon the special case. And to show that the board have no unfavorable feelings towards the petitioner, which has drawn from them these remarks, in opposition to any general provision embracing this class of cases, they feel bound to give to the house the following information as to the faithfulness and honesty of this claimant.

Mr. Eggleston, after making this contract, entered upon the work, and pursued it with industry and good faith. He appeared to study the most rigid economy in its prosecution; moved his family to the vicinity of the job; boarded his own hands; and in that way employed not only the males, but the females of his household in the business. When he commenced the job, he was reputed to be worth a decent property, and possessed a small farm. When his contract was closed, even after the allowance made to him over and above the contract prices of the work, he was involved in debt, and unable to discharge himself from his embarrassments. His property was sacrificed by public sales, and he was himself committed to the liberties of the gaol of his county for debt. From thence he was discharged, by availing himself of the insolvent laws of the state. After this discharge from the coercion of his creditors was obtained, he renewed his industrious habits, and his exertions seemed still directed to the payment of his debts. At about this time, in the course of the appraisal of damages which had been done to individuals by the construction of the canals, an award was made to this petitioner, to a considerable amount, for the destruction of a mill owned by him before his failure, and from which the water had been taken to feed the canal. The money upon this award was drawn by him, and faithfully applied to the payment of those debts, from the pressure of which he had resorted to the relief of the insolvent laws. This enabled him to complete the payment of his debts, but left himself and family in the extreme of poverty.

These facts are ascertained by the board from the acting canal commissioner upon this part of the canal at the time this work was doing, and from other sources, which, in the opinion of the board, entitle them to credit. Mr. Eggleston is now past the meridian of life, and is poor. That he has had a hard contract upon the canal, the board do not doubt; and they most cheerfully submit his case to the wisdom and justice of the legislature. But they cannot consent that any favorable representation of this individual case, shall be taken by the house as an admission on their part, of the policy or the justice, as a general provision, of again opening for adjudication, canal contracts which have been settled for years, and under the operation of a most liberal law.

All which is respectfully submitted,

Articles of agreement, made and concluded the seventh day of September, in the year eighteen hundred and seventeen, between Darius Eggleston, of the one part, and the canal commissioners of the state of New-York, of the other part; whereby it is covenanted and agreed as follows, to wit:

The said Darius covenants and agrees to grub, clear, excavate, embank and construct, in a good, substantial and workmanlike manner, all that part of the Erie canal which lies between the western termination of section number twenty-two, and a point in section number twenty-one, situated twenty-seven chains westerly, as the canal line runs from the eastern termination of the section last mentioned; the length of line included in this contract being about two miles eleven chains and fifty-five links, reference being herein had to the surveys, levels and maps of Benjamin Wright, esquire, engineer. The grubbing is to be at least sixty feet wide, that is, thirty feet on each side from the middle of the canal; in which space of sixty feet, all the trees, logs, roots, saplings, bushes, and wood of every kind, are to be dug, cleared, eradicated, and wholly removed therefrom: A space of thirty-six feet in width, on each side of the part so grubbed, is to be cleared in such manner that no trees, saplings or bushes are to be left standing thereon; and for the space of fifteen feet in width, on each side of the part so to be grubbed and cleared, the trees, saplings and bushes shall be cut as near the ground as may be, nor shall any of their stumps be left of more than one foot in height; and all the logs, trees, roots, stumps, saplings, bushes, brush, and wood of all descriptions, shall be removed at least forty-five feet from the centre of the canal. The canal and banks are to be constructed in such manner, that the water may in all places be at least forty feet wide at the surface, twenty-eight feet at the bottom, and four feet deep: Each of the banks shall be at least two feet above the top water line; and such a slope shall be preserved on the inner side of the banks, both above and below the top water line, as that every foot perpendicular rise shall give a horizontal base of at least eighteen inches. The surface of the towing path shall be at least ten feet wide, and shall be not less than two nor more than five feet in any place above the top water line; it shall be on the northerly side of the canal; its surface shall be made of the best materials which the adjoining excavation can furnish; it shall be smooth and even, without any sudden inequalities in its height. The bank opposite the towing path shall in all places be at least five feet wide on its surface, and shall be made with as much evenness and regularity as may be: Nor shall either of the banks, unless where they contain an extra width at the surface, in consequence of a redundance of stuff, have a less slope on the outer than on the inner or water side. No part of the extra stuff, nor any trees, logs, stumps, roots, bushes, or rubbish of any kind, shall be thrown, felled, removed, placed, or left on either of those parts of the canal which are contiguous or adjoining to the part included in this contract. All the loose and porous materials which are of a perishable nature, or permeable to water, shall occupy the outer extremities of the banks; and for the distance of at least ten feet, measured horizontally from the top water line on each side of the canal, the banks shall be wholly made and constructed, both above and below the top water line, of the most pure, solid, compact and watertight earth, which the adjoining excavation can supply; nor shall any vegetable mould, leaves, roots, grass, herbage, logs, sticks, brush, or any other substance of a vegetable, porous or perishable nature, be left, laid, placed, or in any way admitted into the said space of ten feet, horizontally measured from the top water line, or above or below the same.

And whereas an embankment is necessary to be made, within the limits of this contract, over the valley of the Beaver-Dam creek, it is agreed, for the sake of giving sufficient solidity to the said embankment, that two ditches shall be dug by the said Darius across the swamp in said valley: which ditches shall be each five feet wide, and one foot in depth: One of the said ditches shall have its inner edge perpendicularly under the inner edge of the towing path; the other shall have its inner edge perpendicularly under the inner edge of the top water line of the bank opposite the towing path. And the said Darius further agrees, that during the progress of the work, he will from time to time conform to such deviations from the above designated line, and to such alterations in the form, dimensions and slope of the banks, towing path, or any other of the works, as either of the said commissioners, or any engineer by them or either of them appointed for that purpose, shall direct.

It is mutually agreed by the parties to this contract, that all earth carried into the embankment over the valley of Beaver-Dam creek, from within the banks of the canal, and which is moved eight rods or more, and all other earth necessary to construct said embankment, is to be paid for as embankment: In all other places within this contract, the banks are to be made as aforesaid, with earth excavated within the canal, and to be paid for as excavation only.

The commissioners covenant and agree to pay the said Darius for completing this contract, as follows: For grubbing and clearing as aforesaid, where there is standing timber, at the rate of twelve hundred dollars per mile: for grubbing where the timber is felled and cleared off, and stumps, &c. only remain, such sum as Benjamin Wright shall judge reasonable; for grubbing across the swamp in the valley aforesaid, fifty dollars in addition to the above; for digging the two ditches above mentioned, ten dollars; for excavating the canal, and constructing the banks and towing path, for the first fifty chains in length, measured from the west end of section number twenty-two, eastward, at the rate of fifteen cents per cubic yard; for all earth necessarily excavated within the banks or under them, for excavating the canal and forming the banks and towing path through the residue of this contract, except the embankment aforesaid, at the rate of twelve and an half cents per cubic yard for excavation necessary to be made within the banks or under them; for constructing the embankment over the Beaver-Dam creek valley, twenty-five cents per cubic yard measured in the bank, for all earth necessarily moved into said embankment as aforesaid.

And the said works, during their progress, shall be, from time to time, carefully examined and inspected: And to prevent all disputes and misunderstandings, it is agreed that Benjamin Wright, or some other competent engineer to be selected by the canal commissioners, shall be the inspector of said works, and shall also estimate the number of cubic yards of excavation and embankment; and his estimate shall be final and conclusive between the parties to this contract.

And it is agreed, that if any public road or highway crosses the canal line within the limits of this contract, the passing on such highway shall not, by excavation, nor in any other manner, be obstructed or incommoded before the first day of August next, without leave of said commissioners or their engineer.

And it is further agreed, that whenever this contract, in the opinion of the said Benjamin Wright, or other engineer to be selected as aforesaid, is completely performed in every respect on the part of the said Darius, according to its true intent, spirit and meaning, the said engineer shall certify the same under his hand, on the back of this instrument or a counterpart thereof, together with an estimate of the number of cubic yards of excavation and embankment as aforesaid; and the said commissioner shall, within ten days after notice of said certificate, pay the said Darius the sum which, according to this contract and the said estimate, shall be due to him: Provided, that this contract shall be fully performed and completed on the part of said Darius, by the tenth of December, eighteen hundred and eighteen.

Ordered, That the said bill be committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. C. L. Livingston, from the select committee to which was referred so much of the message of the Governor as relates to the salaries allowed to the chancellor, judges of the supreme court, and circuit judges, reported:

In examining with due deliberation the subject assigned to them, the committee have not been indifferent to the desire of acquiring such information as would be favorable to a full understanding of the reasons for the various changes in the salaries of our public functionaries. From the information obtained, it appears that the principle acted upon by previous legislatures in relation to official compensation, has been, to regulate it in proportion to the increase or diminution of services performed, or responsibilities assumed. Of the correctness of this principle, the committee do not entertain a doubt; and adopting it as their guide, they recommend the attention of the legislature to the salaries now paid to the chancellor, judges of the supreme court, and to the circuit judges, as not only greatly disproportionate to their services, but in the language of the message, "insufficient to save them from actual loss." Such injustice committed under the forms and authority of the laws, cannot but create painful emotions; and needs only to be mentioned, to receive from an enlightened legislature an immediate correction. No subject within the range of legislation is more deserving of favor, and no demand upon the treasury more imperative, than the adequate compensation for the services of public officers occupying responsible stations. To call forth men of competent abilities and unsuspected probity, to fill the seats of justice, such salaries should be given as would enable the judges to support themselves and their families, and in some degree provide for that retirement contemplated by our constitution.

To submit to this house any standard of compensation that will not meet with objections, is not expected; yet the committee cannot refrain from the expression of their opinion, that such recompense as would yield a fair equivalent for services, and relieve public officers from all anxiety except the faithful performance of duty, is recommended by every principle of justice and sound discretion.

With this conviction, the committee have agreed to recommend that the chancellor and judges of the supreme court, be allowed each $2,250 per annum, and the circuit judges $1,500 per annum, in lieu of the salaries now allowed to them by law.

In making this recommendation, the committee cherish no other feelings than those of deep solicitude for the character of the state, and of awarding justice to the individuals interested.

The committee have prepared a bill, which they have directed their chairman to ask leave to introduce.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. C. L. Livingston, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act for the payment of certain officers of government;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Ordered, That the usual number of copies of the said bill and report be printed for the use of the legislature.

Mr. Dayton, from the select committee to which was referred the engrossed bill from the Senate, entitled "An act for the relief of the devisees of Edward Chinn," reported, that they have examined the said bill, and see no reason why the same should not be passed into a law.

Ordered, That the said bill be committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Dayton, from the committee on the incorporation and alteration of the charters of banking and insurance companies, on the petition of the Neptune insurance company, praying for an increase of their capital, asked leave to report by bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Dayton, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act to incorporate the Neptune insurance company of the city of New-York;'" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. C. L. Livingston, from the select committee to which was referred the memorial of the mayor, aldermen and commonalty of the city of New-York, praying for an alteration in the law relative to the duties of the clerk of the police office in said city, reported:

That they have examined the law referred to in the memorial, entitled "An act relative to the district attorney and other officers of criminal justice in the city of New-York," passed April 23d, 1823; from which it appears that the clerk of the police office in said city is required, once in every three months, to render a just and true account, verified by his oath, to the comptroller of said city, of all fees received by him, and to specify in such accounts received in each case.

A compliance with the requisitions of this act, has been found not only difficult, but almost impracticable. Fees are received in the office as well by the justices and others, as by the clerk; and when the latter is necessarily absent, it is impossible for him to specify, if fees should be collected, the amount received in each case, as directed by the statute.

The committee are of opinion that a sufficient security would be afforded for the faithful conduct of the clerk, by requiring him to specify in his account the amount received on each day, and that there could be no practical difficulty in complying with such a requisition.

The committee have prepared a bill, which they have directed their chairman to ask leave to introduce.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. C. L. Livingston, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act relative to the clerk of the police office in the city of New-York;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Gosman, from the select committee to which was referred the engrossed bill from the Senate, entitled "An act to establish a ferry across the Seneca lake, from the cove on the south side of Peach-Orchard point in Hector, Tompkins county, to Big-Stream point in the town of Starkey, Yates county," reported, that they have examined the said bill, and see no reason why the same should not be passed into a law.

Ordered, That the said bill be committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Jenkins, from the select committee to whom was committed the engrossed bill from the Senate, entitled "An act to divide the town of Camillus in the county of Onondaga," reported, that the committee had gone through the said bill, and agreed to the same without amendment; which he was directed to report to the house, and he read the report in his place, and delivered the same in at the table, where it was again read.

Ordered, That the said report be laid upon the table.

A communication from a committee in behalf of the New-York Historical society, was read in the words following, to wit:

TO THE HONORABLE THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF NEW-YORK.

The undersigned, a committee in behalf of the New-York historical society, respectfully submit the following report:

That an act was passed in 1827, for the relief of this society, granting $5000 for the extinguishment of their debts. It directed satisfactory evidence to be first adduced to the comptroller of the reduction of such debts to this amount, and payment thereupon to be made, on receiving a bond conditioned for the faithful appropriation of the money, and subsequently on account of such appropriation, to be rendered with satisfactory vouchers.

In compliance with the provisions of this act, the requisite bond was delivered, upon the previous evidence furnished of the reduction of the debts to the amount of the grant; and on the receipt thereof, the society was enabled to liquidate forthwith all claims against them of every description. Their treasurer has made a return of the specific application of this money, in an account rendered to the comptroller, with releases severally executed by their creditors; which documents have been deemed by the latter satisfactory and conclusive, and are now on file in his office.

Relieved by this munificent grant from the embarrassments which at that period threatened their very existence, the society avail themselves of this occasion, to acknowledge their grateful sense of the obligation conferred upon the institution, by the timely succour generously afforded by the legislature. For their present prosperous condition, they are solely indebted to that public spirit which, characteristic of the popular sentiment, has nobly achieved splendid designs of inestimable advantage to the state, and permanently monumental of its fame.

This donation will be appreciated by posterity in its beneficial results, as it has enabled the society to preserve inviolate its entire collection—a collection unrivalled by any other in this country for its richness and variety of materials; and which in times to come, will be beyond price, in furnishing to the future historian of the state, authentic and copious means for the completion of so desirable a work.

To collect and preserve books, manuscripts, paintings, engravings, maps, charts, medals and coins, relating to and in elucidation of the natural, civil, literary and ecclesiastical history of the United States in general, and particularly of this state, are the specific objects for which this society was incorporated. For nineteen years past, the various materials in reference to these distinct subjects, have been diligently sought after, zealously collected, and carefully preserved for present and future use. And they trust, by the occasional publication of compilations from these sources, and original essays, illustrative of the objects of the society, to evince that the patronage of the state has not, on their behalf, been fruitlessly exerted.

The library contains about 7,000 volumes; 3,000 of which relate directly to the history of America; independently of 300 volumes of newspapers of the most interesting and important dates. A large proportion of the residue, though in a less degree connected with the history of this country, are rare and valuable, and such as it was deemed expedient at the time to secure, for the benefit of science and literature.

The manuscripts are of especial interest, and were obtained in several instances from the immediate descendants of the fathers of the revolution, who left behind them these memorials of the toil and share, which they themselves bore in the laying of the foundation of this republic. In all cases, they are derived from authentic sources, foreign and domestic, and are altogether precious materials, deposited in cases prepared for their convenient reception and exhibition.

The collection of maps and charts, with the portraits of the eminent individuals, whose fame is associated with the history of the state, constitute an intrinsically valuable portion of the property of the society. Besides these, is a cabinet of coins and medals, of gold, silver and copper pieces, principally ancient and much esteemed.

The whole of this extensive collection of books, manuscripts, maps and coins, has lately been systematically and appropriately arranged; no longer like the scattered leaves of the sibyl, occasioning doubt and perplexity as to their merits, or the nature of their contents. In addition to this undertaking, a catalogue in minute detail, in every variety of its departments, has been correctly prepared in alphabetical series, corresponding by numerical references to the different materials to which they respectively relate. Of the aggregate value of the collection, a correct estimate cannot be better formed, than from an inspection of the catalogue itself; copies of which will, on the completion of its publication, be placed in the library of the state.

The society holds stated meetings on the 2d Tuesday severally of each month. The number of resident members is constantly increasing; the aggregate amount of whose annual dues constitutes the income of the society. And notwithstanding the expenditure unavoidably incurred in fitting up their apartments, the binding of their books, and the due preservation of their property, a small surplus remains, which, by its future augmentation, and with proper economy, will, it is hoped, enable the society more widely to extend its researches, enlarge its collection, and annually, or oftener, add to the present number of their published volumes of "Historical Collections."

A message from the Governor, delivered by his private secretary, was read, in the words following, to wit:

TO THE ASSEMBLY.

GENTLEMEN,

I have the honor to lay before you a communication from the Secretary of War, asking a cession of jurisdiction to the United States, over certain grounds purchased by them, and appertaining to the arsenal at Watervliet.

MARTIN VAN BUREN.

Albany, March 2, 1829.

DEPARTMENT OF WAR, February 20, 1829.

SIR—

The advantageous location of the United States' arsenal at Watervliet, on the Hudson, having suggested the expediency of enlarging that establishment, it was found necessary, in the course of last year, to purchase some additional grounds for the erection of buildings for the deposite of ordnance stores, and for workshops, and artificers' quarters; and the purpose of this communication is to submit, through your excellency, to the legislature of the state of New-York, a request that the jurisdiction over the lands thus purchased, may, as has been usual in such cases, be ceded to the United States, so long as they shall be used for public purpose, reserving to the state the right of executing its civil and criminal process thereon.

Major Talcott, of the ordnance, now commanding at the arsenal, will have the honor to deliver this letter, and will lay before your excellency, or a committee of the legislature, as you may direct, the title deeds and a map of the ground, with such other information as may be necessary to a full understanding of the views of the department on the subject of this communication.

I have the honor to be,
Your Excellency's
Most ob't. serv't.
P. B. PORTER.

His Excellency MARTIN VAN BUREN,
Governor of the State of New-York.

ORDNANCE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 21, 1829.

Major G. TALCOTT, Watervliet.

SIR—I enclose herewith a letter from the Secretary of War, addressed to Governor Van Buren, on the subject of ceding jurisdiction of the ground belonging to the United States at Watervliet.

You wi l please to present this letter in person to the governor, and furnish such information in relation to it, as may be necessary and proper to promote its objects.

Your attention to the subject, after it may have been referred to the legislature or its committees, will probably aid in procuring the adoption of the measures desired. You will accordingly give such attention, whenever it may be necessary and proper.

Respectfully, I am
Your ob't. servant,
G. BOMFORD,
Lt. Col. on Ordnance Service.

Ordered, That the said message, with the documents accompanying the same, be referred to the committee on the militia.

Ordered, That the usual number of copies of the same be printed for the use of the legislature.

A message from the Governor, delivered by his private secretary, was read, in the words following, to wit:

TO THE ASSEMBLY.

GENTLEMEN,

I have been requested by a committee of the "New-York Law Institute," to lay the accompanying papers before the legislature. The chancellor's reply fully confirms the impression, which is, I believe, universal with the profession, that the relief prayed for, is indispensable to the due administration of justice. Allow me, therefore, to recommend the subject to your early and favorable consideration.

M. V. BUREN.

Albany, March 2d, 1829.

New-York, February 24th, 1829.

To His Excellency Gov. VAN BUREN:

We beg leave to hand you the correspondence which has just passed between us, a committee of the New-York law institute, and the chancellor of the state, on a subject of great importance, especially to those who may be suitors in the court of chancery, residing in the city of New-York.

If your excellency should look upon it in that light, or deem it entitled to such consideration, we have to request that you would make it the subject of a communication to the legislature, recommending it to their favorable notice and attention.

We have the honor to be,
With great respect,
Your Excellency's
Most ob't. serv't.
W. T. McCOUN,
GEO. W. STRONG,
R. SEDGWICK,
GEO. F TALMAN,
JAMES I. ROSEVELT, Jr.

TO THE HONORABLE THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF NEW-YORK.

The memorial of the undersigned committee of the New-York law institute, on behalf of the institute, respectfully sheweth:

That the business of the court of chancery having increased within the last few years, in an unprecedented degree, and being likely still more to increase under the newly revised laws, which confer upon that court some additional jurisdiction, it is very manifest, that whatever may be the talents and industry of the chancellor, the powers of no one man are adequate to the discharge of the duties of that office, and therefore, as your memorialists believe this important branch of our judiciary establishment requires to be strengthened, so as to meet the emergency, and to insure to suitors in that court, not only an able and impartial, but a prompt administration of equity and justice.

Your memorialists know of no plan by which this object can be so well attained, as by the appointment of a vice-chancellor, to reside in the city of New-York, to act as an assistant to the chancellor, and whose time and attention shall be devoted exclusively to the business of that court within the city.

Your memorialists are however aware, that the legislature have already, in the revised laws, constiuted the several circuit judges, vice-chancellors, but with a local and restricted jurisdiction. This system, your memorialists can readily believe, will answer all the purposes for which it is intended, as regards the country; but they most respectfully urge, as the result of their own reflections upon the subject, as well as the opinions of the best informed among us, that it will not produce the desired effect, as respects the city of New-York. Within the city of New-York, there is sufficient equity business to keep the court of chancery constantly sitting; and your memorialists may safely assert, that neither the chancellor, (being obliged to sit elsewhere, and occupied as he must be with business arising in other parts of the state,) nor a circuit judge, having other duties to perform, can possibly despatch the business of that court in the city of New-York, with the promptitude which is always desirable, and which its importance generally demands. Some relief therefore appears to be necessary, besides what is proposed by the new revised laws.

Your memorialists most respectfully pray, that your honorable body would take the subject into consideration, and that you would provide by law for the appointment of a vice-chancellor, (other than the circuit judge) to reside in the city of New-York, who shall be an additional or assistant judge of the court of chancery, to the end that the chancellor of the state may be relieved, in some measure, from the burden imposed upon him, already overwhelming, and that delays in that court, with which we are now threatened, may be prevented.

(COPY.)

New-York, February 18th, 1829.

The Hon. R. H. Walworth, Chancellor, &c.

Sir—We have recently been appointed a committee of the New-York law institute, which is composed of all the principal members of the bar of this city, to take such steps as may be thought necessary, towards procuring the passage of a law for the appointment of a vice-chancellor, to reside here.

We have it in contemplation to present the subject to his excellency the governor, as we deem it a matter of great importance, and to ask him to recommend it to the particular attention of the legislature: but before we do this, we beg leave, with all frankness, to submit to you our views of the necessity which exists for the measure, and to request the favor of your communicating to us your own opinion concerning it. Every one acquainted with the court of chancery, or who has been conversant in it during the last few years, cannot but have observed the overpress of business upon the chancellor, and must have perceived, that whatever industry and exertions may be used, the powers of no one man are adequate to the discharge of the duties of that office; and we apprehend that those duties are likely to increase under the newly revised laws, which confer upon that court some additional jurisdiction. It is therefore manifest, that something should be done to relieve the chancellor from a portion of his labors, otherwise great and ruinous delays must soon be incurred in causes depending in that court.

The best way in which this relief can be given, is to take off the weight of the business arising in this city, by appointing a vice-chancellor, to reside here and to hold the court, whose time and attention shall be wholly and exclusively devoted to it. This, it appears to us, will afford the chancellor sufficient relief, and at the same time be the means of despatching the business.

The legislature, however, have already proposed a remedy in the revised laws, by constituting the circuit judges vice-chancellors. We are confident this plan, as far as regards the city of New-York, will not answer the purpose. Our experience fully shews, that there is sufficient equity business in this city to keep the court constantly engaged, and to require that the person holding the court should not be called off to attend to other duties. And we are likewise convinced that the judge of the first circuit (notwithstanding the successful experiment of the superior court) will continue to have his own courts, including the criminal side, which is often very laborious, as much business as will fully occupy him; and that it is in vain for us to hope that he will be able to hear and dispose of the causes in the court of chancery also; many of which are very heavy, and require the most patient investigation and research. It is therefore very certain, from the unavoidable pressure of other business upon the circuit judge, that if we are obliged to depend upon that officer, as proposed in the revised laws, the chancery business of this city cannot be got through with, and the consequence will be an almost total suspension of the powers of that court, as respects this city, or delays amounting almost to a denial of the benefit and advantages to be derived from our equity system, which we, in common with the rest of the state, are entitled to enjoy. We may add, moreover, that if this plan is adhered to, which requires that suits in equity shall be brought before the circuit judge, where he has jurisdiction, (as will, with few exceptions, be the case here,) and the hearings must take place before him in the first instance, instead of the chancellor, then we shall be in a much worse condition than we are in now, under the present system, and shall not enjoy equal advantages with other suitors who may be so fortunate as to be able to sue before the chancellor himself, or other circuit judges, where the same causes for retarding the proceedings or delaying the decisions, do not exist.

These, sir, are among the reasons which induce us and our constituents to urge that provision should be made for the appointment of an officer, other than the chancellor or circuit judge, to perform the duties of chancellor in this city. They show the necessity which exists for it; and that the plan adopted in the revised laws, will not answer the intended purpose. We are satisfied our opinions are well founded, and should your honor coincide with us, we shall be much gratified to have your opinion of the necessity or propriety of the measure, that we may lay the subject befor his excellency the governor, and take such other steps as may be deemed advisable to bring the matter under consideration in the legislature.

We have the honor to be,
With great respect,
Your most ob't. serv'ts.

Albany, February 21st, 1829.

GENTLEMEN—

I have received yours of the 18th instant, on the subject of a vice-chancellor in the first circuit. Taking into consideration the present common law duties of the circuit judge, and the additional duty of hearing appeals from the surrogates in all cases of contested wills, both of real and personal estate, I am satisfied no individual can discharge those duties, and have any leisure to do the business of vice-chancellor of that circuit, under the provisions of the revised statutes. Judging from the business before me, I should suppose nearly half of the business of the court of chancery was from that circuit. If so, there will be sufficient to employ the vice-chancellor constantly, without attending to any other duties; and the chancellor will still have sufficient business before him; and as much as he can get through with, and do justice to the suitors. The business of this court, as well as that of the supreme court, is constantly increasing, and has nearly doubled since the adoption of the new constitution. If the local business of the city of New-York can be disposed of before a vice-chancellor, I think the chancellor can dispose of the business which will then come before him. But without some relief of that kind, the channels of justice must be blocked up. I have been actually sitting in court nearly half the time since my appointment, and for the residue of the time I have been engaged in the duties of my office from twelve to fifteen hours in a day. With the exception of one night, I have not been able to retire to rest before two o'clock, for the last three weeks; and I still find the business of the court accumulating on my hands.

For these reasons, I fully coincide with your views of the necessity and propriety of having a vice-chancellor in New-York, who may devote his whole time to equity business. I think the system reported by the revisers, as amended and passed in the Senate, the best that has been suggested. The only alteration I would propose, is to have the vice-chancellor appointed immediately, so that he may, under a proper clause to be inserted in the law, be employed until the new system goes into operation, in hearing and deciding a part of the business now ready for a hearing before the chancellor. Without some provision of that kind, many causes now pending cannot be decided under one or two years.

I am, gentlemen,
With respect, yours, &c.
R. HYDE WALWORTH.

James Emott, president, and Walter Cunningham, cashier, of the Dutchess County Bank, being sworn, depose and say, that the foregoing is a full and true account of the funds and property of the bank; that the amount of capital stock subscribed is $150,000, of which one half is paid in; and that the amount of specie above mentioned is bona fide the property of the bank, and has not been borrowed, or in any wise obtained with the view to make this return. And these deponents further say, that since the last annual return, as before, the bank has kept an account in the North River Bank in the city of New-York, in order to have its bills receivable and current in New-York, so that such bills might pass in the state and elsewhere without discount; and the directors have accordingly ordered such surplus funds as were not needed at the bank for its ordinary business, to be sent to the said North River Bank, to redeem the paper there; and that the sum above stated as being in that bank, are the funds of this bank, placed there for the aforesaid purpose, with the ordinary means of the bank. And these deponents also say, that they have used such means, whenever requested by their customers, and persons holding their bills, by giving drafts on New-York at sight, and without premium; and that the bank has not been concerned, during the year, in the purchase of the bills of other banks, at discount or otherwise. And these deponents further say, that the balance due other banks, as stated in the preceding statement, is for collections recently made for such banks, and not yet remitted.

A copy of a resolution of the Senate, delivered by their clerk, was read, in in the words following, to wit:

Mr. Randall gave notice that he would, on some future day, ask leave to introduce a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Sharon and Canajoharie turnpike company," passed at the present session of the legislature.

The house then proceeded to the consideration of the report of the committee on the militia, on the resolution referred to them on Friday last, instructing the committee to inquire into the expediency of increasing the compensation allowed by law to the inspector of the 40th brigade of infantry of this state; the said report being, that in the opinion of the committee, it is not expedient at this time to alter or amend the law in relation to that subject.

Mr. Speaker put the question whether the house would agree with the committee in their said report, and it was determined in the affirmative.

Mr. Allison, from the committee on engrossed bills, reported, that they have examined the engrossed bill entitled "An act to confirm the appointment of superintendents of the poor-house in the county of Livingston," and the engrossed bill entitled "An act relating to the appointment of public notaries and commissioners of deeds in the city of New-York," and that the same are correctly engrossed.

The petition of sundry inhabitants of the county of St. Lawrence, praying for the construction of the Black river canal, was read, and referred to the committee on canals and internal improvements.

Mr. Skinner, from the committee on colleges, academies and common schools, to which was referred the petition of the trustees of the Stamford library association, in the county of Delaware, reported:

That it appears from the petition, that in the year 1806, a number of inhabitants associated together for the purpose of erecting a library; that their funds have been, from time to time, increased by the admission of new members, until a respectable library has been collected; that they have never been incorporated; that they cannot avail themselves of the general act of 1813, inasmuch as many of the subscribers have removed from the place, and the number required by law being two-thirds of the subscribers, cannot be obtained; they therefore pray that a special act of incorporation may be passed.

The committee see no objection to granting the prayer of the petition, and have accordingly prepared a bill, which they now ask leave to introduce.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Skinner, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to incorporate the trustees of the Stamford library association in the county of Delaware;'" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Skinner, from the committee on colleges, academies and common schools, on the petition of the trustees of school district number 13 in the village of Newburgh, praying for the incorporation of a high school, asked leave to report by bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Skinner, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to establish a high school at Newburgh;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Holdridge, from the committee on the judiciary, on the communication of the secretary of state, asked leave to report by bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Holdridge, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to provide for the transferring from the office of the secretary of state to the office of the register in chancery, certain papers therein named;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Soper, from the committee on the judiciary, to which was referred the petition of sundry inhabitants of the county of Sullivan, praying for the passage of a law, directing the clerk of the county of Ulster to deliver to the clerk of the county of Sullivan all such maps, field-books, ballotting books, records and other papers, filed in the clerk's office of the county of Ulster, relating to certain great lots of the Hardenbergh patent, lying within the county of Sullivan, to be deposited and remain of record in the office of the clerk of the county of Sullivan, reported:

That from the examination they have given to the application of the petitioners, it appears that about the year 1809 the county of Sullivan was erected from the south western part of the county of Ulster; that the Hardenbergh patent lies principally within the counties of Ulster, Sullivan and Delware, and certain great lots in said patent lie wholly within the county of Sullivan, and others partly within the counties of Sullivan, Ulster and Delaware; that previous to the erection of the county of Sullivan, partition of many of the lots in said patent was made between the owners thereof, and surveys made of several of the other lots; that records, maps, field-books, and other documents relating to the said partitions and surveys, are now of record, or on file in the clerk's office in the county of Ulster.

The petitioners represent, that the titles to various parts of the lots within the county of Sullivan are unsettled and in dispute; and for the purpose of saving trouble and expense in going to the clerk's office in the county of Ulster, to procure evidence in these disputes, they wish to have an act passed directing the removal of the records, maps, &c. to the clerk's office of Sullivan county.

The committee have not been able to ascertain whether the records, maps, &c. asked for by the petitioners, relate exclusively to the lots lying within the county of Sullivan, and are separate and distinct from other lands belonging to the Hardenbergh patent; and inasmuch as they are informed, that the greater part of the owners or claimants of said lots do not reside in the county of Sullivan, and are referred by these title deeds and papers, relating to the lands in said patent, to the clerk's office in the county of Ulster, the committee deem it inexpedient to grant the prayer of the petitioners, and ask leave to offer the following resolution.

Resolved, That the petitioners have leave to withdraw their petition.

Mr. Speaker put the question whether the house would agree to the said resolution, and it was determined in the affirmative.

A message from the Governor, delivered by his private secretary, was read, in the words following, to wit:

TO THE SENATE AND ASSEMBLY.

GENTLEMEN,

In the communication which I had the honor to make to the legislature at the commencement of the session, I apprised you that the act authorising the employment of counsel to assist in the prosecution of persons charged with the abduction of William Morgan would expire in the month of May next. I have since appointed John C. Spencer, Esq. to be such counsel, in the place of Daniel Moseley, Esq. who has resigned the same in consequence of his appointment as circuit judge.

In a letter from Mr. Spencer, addressed to a member of the Senate, and communicated to me, he recommends a continuance of the act for another year, expresses his opinion that no alteration in it is expedient or necessary, and adds, that the continuing it in force ought to be disconnected with any provision or proposition whatever. In a more recent letter received from him by me, he repeats his convictions of the urgent necessity that the act should be kept in force for at least one year longer, and requests me to recommend the subject to your attention.

Believing the original measure to be a very proper one, and concurring fully in the views expressed by the special attorney, I take the liberty of soliciting your early and favorable attention to the subject.

M. V. BUREN.

Albany, March 3d, 1829.

Ordered, That the said message be committed to a committee of the whole when on the bill to which it relates; and that the usual number of copies thereof be printed for the use of the legislature.

A communication from the comptroller, was read, in the words following, to wit:

COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
Albany, March 3, 1829.

SIR,

I have the honor herewith to transmit a report, made in pursuance of a resolution of the Honorable the Assembly of the 13th January last.

I am, very respectfully,
Your obedient servant,

S. WRIGHT, Jun.

Hon. Peter Robinson,
Speaker of the Assembly.

COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
Albany, March 3, 1829.

The comptroller, in obedience to a resolution of the Honorable the Assembly of the 13th January last, requesting him "to submit to the house a statement of the loans heretofore made by this state to individuals, companies and incorporations, which now remain unpaid, specifying the time when payable, and the amount due on each loan respectively," reports:

That the annexed schedules, marked No. 1 and 2, embrace a full list of the loans called for by the resolution, together with the amounts now due, or which would be due to the state upon each loan, as nearly as those facts can be now ascertained. It will be seen by the notes to schedule No. 1, that in many cases of foreclosure of mortgages, the land was bid in by the state, and has been re-sold. In these cases, the sums carried out as due, are the sums which would now be due to the state upon each loan, over and above the sums for which the mortgaged premises have been re-sold; or in other words, the sum carried out as due in each case, is the loss which the state has sustained by a failure in the receipt of the principal and interest of the loan. These cases are marked B. upon schedule No. 1. The remaining cases marked A. and C., are either where the lands yet remain in the hands of the state, or where partial re-sales have been made, and the residue of the mortgaged premises remains the property of the state. In these cases, the sums carried out are the principal and interest which would now be due to the state upon the original loan; but the extent of loss, if any, to be sustained by the state, cannot be ascertained until entire re-sales take place.

Schedule No. 2, contains a list of the loans, where payments of interest have been made to a greater or less extent, and where no foreclosures have been had.

Respectfully submitted,

SILAS WRIGHT, Jun.

Ordered, That the usual number of copies of the same be printed for the use of the legislature.

A communication from the canal commissioners was read, in the words following, to wit:

The canal commissioners, to whom was referred by the honorable the Assembly the petition of Joseph E. Smith & Co. respectfully report:

That the petitioners represent that they were contractors on the Oswego canal; that in consequence of an extraordinary sickness and mortality which prevailed along the line of the canal, and particularly on the section embraced by their contract, they sustained severe losses in the enhancement of the price of labor; that the canal board have not authority, under existing laws, to make them compensation for losses arising from sickness; and they therefore pray the legislature for a law, empowering the canal board to settle their claims for losses resulting from this cause, on equitable grounds, or for such other relief as may be deemed just and expedient.

The petitioners were contractors for sections 4 and 5. The whole amount of their work, at the contract prices, was $8,827 42. They have been allowed by the canal board, over and above this sum, on the ground that the work proved to be of a different character and description than was anticipated, the sum of $5,060 68. But nothing has been allowed them for the losses they sustained by the providential visitation alluded to in their petition. The terrible malady which prevailed on the canal line, was perhaps more fatal on this job than on any other. It is said that about fifty laborers who were employed on this job, lost their lives, besides the numbers of others who in many instances recovered from the sickness with impaired constitutions.

The canal board have decided that they have no power to remunerate for losses occasioned by sickness; and if this power were conferred upon them, its exercise would probably be attended with great embarrassments and difficulties. Would not the widows and children of the poor laborers whose death had deprived them of support, be entitled to as much sympathy as the contractors whose funds had been exhausted by the enhanced price of labor?

In behalf of the Canal Commissioners,
HENRY SEYMOUR.

March 3, 1829.

Ordered, That the said petition, together with the preceding communication, be referred to the committee on canals and internal improvements.

A message from the Senate, delivered by their clerk, with the bill and a copy of the resolution therein mentioned, was read, informing that they have rejected the bill entitled "An act authorising a loan to the Rochester high school."

Mr. Hascall offered for the consideration of the house, a resolution, with a recital, in the words following, to wit:

Whereas the committee on banks, of the Senate, have reported on the subject of banks; and whereas the committee on banks, of the Assembly, have done the same; and whereas neither the Senate nor the Assembly have made any progress towards the accomplishment of the desired object;

Therefore,

Resolved, (if the Senate concur herein,) That a joint committee of both houses be appointed, whose duty it shall be to review the said reports, and to devise some reasonable and proper system, upon which the charters of old banks shall be renewed, and new banks chartered; and that they report the same to this house.

Ordered, That the said resolution be laid upon the table.

In pursuance of previous notice, Mr. Randall asked for and obtained leave to bring in a bill entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act to incorporate the Canajoharie and Sharon turnpike company,' passed February 9, 1829;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

On motion of Mr. Brinkerhoff,

Resolved, That the attorney-general be requested to report to this house, what measures, in his opinion, are proper to be pursued in relation to William L. Perce, confined in the jail of the county of Cayuga, on a suit in behalf of the people of this state.

Ordered, That the engrossed bill from the Senate, entitled "An act to divide the town of Camillus in the county of Onondaga," be restored to its original number on the general order.

Three several messages from the Senate, delivered by their clerk, with the bills therein mentioned, were read, informing that they have passed the bill entitled "An act to incorporate the Skeneateles academy;" the bill entitled "An act declaring the Ancram turnpike road a public highway," and the bill entitled "An act relative to the National insurance company;" in which bills they request the concurrence of this house.

The said bills were severally read the first time, and by unanimous consent were also read a second time, and the bill entitled "An act to incorporate the Skeneateles academy." was referred to a select committee, consisting of Mr. Jenkins, Mr. Skinner and Mr. L. Smith; the bill entitled "An act declaring the Ancram turnpike road a public highway," was referred to a select committee, consisting of Mr. H. W. Livingston, Mr. Holdridge and Mr. Burt; and the bill entitled "An act relative to the National insurance company," was referred to a select committee, consisting of Mr. C. L. Livingston, Mr. Mallory and Mr. Myers; severally to consider and report thereon.

The Senate returned, by their clerk, the bill entitled "An act authorising the erection of a free bridge across the Chenango river in the town of Chenango in the county of Broome."

A message from the Senate, delivered by their clerk, with the bill and amendments therein mentioned, was read, informing that they have passed the bill entitled "An act providing for the payment of damages to real estate, in consequence of breaches in the canals of this state," with the amendments therewith delivered.

The said bill and amendments were read; and the amendments having been again read, Ordered, That the same be referred to a select committee, consisting of Mr. Johnson, Mr. Armstrong and Mr. Tower.

The house then again resolved itself into a committee of the whole, on the engrossed bill from the Senate, entitled "An act directing the manner of choosing electors of president and vice-president;" and after some time spent thereon, Mr. Speaker resumed the chair, and Mr. Sheppard, from the said committee, reported progress, and asked for and obtained leave to sit again.

The house then again resolved itself into a committee of the whole, on the bill entitled "An act to create a fund for the benefit of the creditors of certain monied corporations, and for other purposes;" and after some time spent thereon, Mr. Speaker resumed the chair, and Mr. Seeley, from the said committee, reported progress, and asked for and obtained leave to sit again.

Ordered, That the usual number of copies of the amendment offered by Mr. Speaker while in committee of the whole on the said bill, be printed for the use of the legislature.

Ordered, That Mr. Carrier have leave of absence for ten days.

And then the House adjourned until ten o'clock to-morrow morning.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 4, 1829.

The House met pursuant to adjournment.

The petition of the trustees of the Buffalo high school association, praying for an amendment of their charter, was read, and referred to the committee on colleges, academies and common schools.

The petition of the trustees of the Buffalo high school association, praying for a loan of money from the state, was read, and referred to the committee on colleges, academies and common schools.

The petition of Thomas Goodsell and others, a committee on the part of the citizens of the village of Utica, praying that the said village may be incorporated as a city, was read, and referred to the committee on the incorporation of cities and villages.

The petition of Otto William Van Tuyl and others, praying to be incorporated into a company, under the name and style of the Franklin coal and manufacturing company, with a capital of $500,000, was read, and referred to the committee on the incorporation and alteration of the charters of banking and insurance companies.

The petition of Daniel Holmes and others, inhabitants of the town of Springwater in the county of Livingston, praying that the canal commissioners may be directed to remove the dam at the foot of Hemlock lake in said county, was read, and referred to the canal commissioners.

The petition of sundry inhabitants of the counties of Montgomery and Greene, praying for the incorporation of a company with a capital of $500,000, for the purpose of constructing a rail-road from Canajoharie to Catskill, was read, and referred to the committee on the establishment and improvement of roads and bridges, and the incorporation of turnpike companies.

The petition of Joseph Mather, praying to be compensated for money expended in defending the title to a lot of land in the town of Pompey in the county of Onondaga, belonging to the people of this state, was read, and referred to the committee on claims.

The memorial of sundry inhabitants of the county of Tompkins, praying for the renewal of the charter of the Bank of Newburgh, and for a continuation of its branch at Ithaca, was read, and referred to the committee on the incorporation and alteration of charters of banking and insurance companies.

Mr. Johnson, from the committee on canals and internal improvements, on the petition of Daniel M'Inroy, praying that the canal board may be directed to re-examine his claim for relief, asked leave to report by bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Johnson, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Daniel M'Inroy;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Holdridge, from the committee on the judiciary, to which was referred the petition of Samuel Jackson, praying for a law to be passed releasing all claim on the part of the state to a certain lot in the village of Brooklyn, in Kings county, reported:

That as appears from the petition of Samuel Jackson, on or about the sixth day of July, in the year one thousand eight hundred and twenty-six, he sold and conveyed to John Seaman and Hugh Morrison, of the village of Brooklyn, a lot of land in said village, twenty-five feet wide front and rear, and ninety-seven feet and six inches deep on each side, for the sum of $1,000, and received from them their joint bond and mortgage on the said premises, to secure the whole of said sum; that subsequent, the said Seaman and Morrison, having commenced building a dwelling-house, and being in want of funds to proceed with the same, applied to the said Samuel Jackson for a further loan, who loaned to the said Seaman and Morrison the further sum of $800, and took a second mortgage on the same premises, as security for the last loan of $800; that the principal and interest of both the foregoing bonds and mortgages, remain unpaid.

The petitioner further states, that the said John Seaman and others, claiming a lien on said premises, have filed their bill in chancery, and made the petitioner, Samuel Jackson, one of the defendants in said suit.

The petition further states, that the said bill in chancery alleges that Hugh Morrison, one of the above named mortgagors, was an alien at the time of the aforesaid conveyance, of which fact Samuel Jackson, the petitioner, has no knowledge, excepting what is derived from the bill in chancery.

The petitioner further states, that he is informed that the said Hugh Morrison has left the state.

It does not appear from the petition, who are the parties complainants in the bill in chancery, with John Seaman; but from a letter handed to the committee, they derive the information that it must have been the joiners, masons, and other workmen engaged in putting up the buildings upon the mortgaged premises.

Upon the above statement, the petitioner prays the legislature to enact a law declaring that the right of the people of the state may not be suffered to interfere with the liens of the said Samuel Jackson, the petitioner.

The committee are of opinion, from the foregoing statement of facts, that the people of the state have no lien upon the lands conveyed by Samuel Jackson, the petitioner. to John Seaman and Hugh Morrison, and mortgaged by the said Seaman and Morrison to the petitioner; nor is there any satisfactory proof to the committee, that the said Morrison is an alien; but if he is, the committee are of opinion that the said Samuel Jackson, the petitioner, has his remedy at law or in equity.

The committee therefore ask leave to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That the petitioner have leave to withdraw his petition.

Mr. Speaker put the question whether the house would agree to the said resolution, and it was determined in the affirmative.

Mr. C. L. Livingston, from the select committee to which was referred the engrossed from the Senate, entitled "An act relative to the National insurance ccmpany," reported, that they have examined the said bill, prepared certain amendments thereto, with which they see no reason why the same should not be passed into a law.

Ordered, That the said bill and amendments be committed to a committee of the whole house.

A communication from the president of the Brooklyn Savings Bank, was read, in the words following, to wit:

NICHOLAS ANTHONY.

Ordered, That the same be laid upon the table.

A communication from the canal commissioners was read, in the words following, to wit:

The canal commissioners, to whom the honorable the Assembly have referred the petition of sundry inhabitants of the counties of Erie and Niagara, residing on the borders of the Tonewanta creek, report:

That the petitioners represent that they reside along that portion of the Tonewanta creek which forms a part of the navigation of the Erie canal; that the dam erected by the canal commissioners, at the mouth of the creek, has raised the water about four feet above its former level, and has overflowed the adjoining lands, which are low and level, and has rendered them unfit for cultivation. They also represent, that this inundation afflicts them with sickness, and will, if not prevented, drive them from their possessions. They therefore pray the legislature to adopt such measures as will obviate these evils.

The country along the Tonewanta creek and its vicinity, is low and swampy, and has ever been subject to inundations and to sickness in summer and autumn. But it is probable that these evils have been augmented by the erection of the above mentioned dam, and the consequent elevation of the water for several miles above it.

The water, during the last year, has been uncommonly high, and has overflowed the land to a considerable extent. This has been occasioned by the extraordinary rains of the last summer, and also by the manner in which the dam was originally built, which did not admit of a reduction of its surface in times of high water. The upper part of this work has since been re-constructed in such manner as to admit of its reduction during floods. This will in some measure obviate the evils of which the petitioners complain. But the dam cannot be lowered during the dry season, or when it is requisite to draw water from Lake Erie. It is necessary to keep it at its present height in time of low water, in order to preserve the declivity which has been given to the canal, for the purpose of sending the water towards Rochester and the Seneca river.

It is believed that the evils complained of by the petitioners cannot be entirely obviated, without abandoning a considerable part of the navigation of the Tonewanta creek, and substituting other works at great expense.

Respectfully submitted,

In behalf of the canal commissioners,

HENRY SEYMOUR,

March 3d, 1829.

Ordered, That the said petition, together, with the preceding communication, be referred to the committee on canals and internal improvements.

The house then proceeded to the consideration of the report of the committee of the whole on the bill entitled "An act authorising the construction of the Chenango canal," the said report being that the committee had disagreed to first enacting clause of the said bill.

Mr. Johnson made a motion that the house should agree to amend the said report, by inserting, after the title of the said bill, the words following, to wit:

The People of the State of New-York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

§ 1. The canal commissioners are hereby authorised and required to proceed with all practicable diligence, to construct and complete a canal from Binghamton, in the county of Broome, up the valley of the Chenango river, to its head waters, and thence through the vallies of the Oriskany and Sawquoit creeks, to the Erie canal, at or near the village of Utica.

§ 2. But before said commissioners shall proceed to construct said canal, they shall cause an examination, surveys, levels and estimates to be made, by a competent engineer, to determine whether a canal from Cleaveland's mill, along the north side of the Oriskany creek, in the town of Madison, and thence in the valley of Skenando creek, through the town of Augusta, to Vernon, and thence to some point on the Erie canal, is practicable and would be more for the interest of the state to construct, than the route through the vallies of the Oriskany and Sawquoit creeks; and if, after such examination, the commissioners shall be of opinion that it would be more for the interest of the state to adopt such route for the canal, than that of the Oriskany and Sawquoit, then they shall construct the same in the valley of the Skenando, instead of the valley of the Oriskany.

§ 3. The canal shall be constructed of the same width and depth as the Erie canal, and the locks shall be made of wood, supported by stone walls, in the manner recommended by Mr. Hutchinson, engineer, in the report of his survey, made during the fall of 1827, and presented to the legislature during the last session.

§ 4. The commissioners of the canal fund shall, from time to time, borrow, on the credit of the state, at an interest not exceeding five per cent., such sum or sums of money as shall be necessary to construct said canal, in amount not exceeding dollars; for which monies, certificates of stock shall be issued, in the manner directed in and by the act entitled "An act to improve the funds and provide for the redemption of the funded debt of this state."

§ 5. All tolls to be collected upon the canal to be constructed by virtue of this act, are hereby appropriated and pledged for the interest and final liquidation of the principal of such sums borrowed; and such tolls shall at no time be less than those which now are, or hereafter may be, established by law, on the Erie and Champlain canals.

§ 6. Such canal shall be known by the name of "The Chenango Canal."

§ 7. The acting canal commissioner shall not proceed to construct said canal unless they shall be first satisfied, by actual survey and estimates, that there will be an adequate supply of water for the summit level, without taking any of the waters of either the Oriskany or Sawquoit creeks, and that the cost of the construction of said canal will not exceed one million of dollars; and also that said canal will produce to the state, in connection with the increased tolls on the Erie canal, in nett proceeds for the first ten years after its construction, four per cent. annually, upon the cost of its construction.

§ 8. For the purpose of ascertaining the practicability, cost and nett proceeds of said canal, the said commissioners shall cause the route of said canal to be carefully and fully surveyed, and estimates of the probable amount of revenue to be derived therefrom, to be made as early in the ensuing summer as practicable.

On motion of Mr. J. Van Beuren,
Ordered, That the said report and amendments be laid on the table.

Ordered, That the usual number of copies of the said amendment be printed for the use of the legislature.

Ordered, That Mr. Ives have leave of absence for six days, and Mr. Boynton for ten days.

Ordered, That the committee on canals and internal improvements be discharged from the further consideration of the report of the canal commissioners on the petition of Joseph E. Smith and others, praying for the passage of a law to empower the canal board to settle the claims of the petitioners for compensation for labour performed on the Oswego canal; and that the said report, together with the petition, be referred to the committee on grievances.

The house then proceeded to the consideration of the report of the committee on colleges, academies and common schools, on the petition of the trustees of Remsen academy in the county of Oneida, as entered on the Journal of Friday the 20th of February last.

Thereupon,

The resolution reported by the committee was again read, in the words following, to wit:

Resolved, That the petitioners have leave to withdraw their petition.

Mr. Speaker put the question whether the house would agree to the said resolution, and it was determined in the affirmative.

The house then proceeded to the consideration of the amendments of the Senate to the bill entitled "An act providing for the payment of damages to real estate, in consequence of breaches in the canals;" one of the said amendments being to amend the title, by adding thereto the words "and for other purposes."

The said bill and amendments were read; and the amendments having been again read, and concurred in,

Ordered, That the clerk deliver the said bill and amendments to the Senate, and inform them that this house have concurred with them in their amendments to the said bill, and have amended the same accordingly.

Ordered, That the committee of the whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill entitled "An act for the appraisement of damages sustained by Benjamin Cook;" and that the said Benjamin Cook have leave to withdraw the said bill, and the documents accompanying the same.

MARTIN VAN BUREN.

§ 1. The canal commissioners are hereby authorised and required to proceed with all practicable diligence, to construct and complete a canal from Binghamton, in the county of Broome, up the valley of the Chenango river, to its head waters, and thence through the vallies of the Oriskany and Sawquoit creeks, to the Erie canal, at or near the village of Utica.

§ 2. But before said commissioners shall proceed to construct said canal, they shall cause an examination, surveys, levels and estimates to be made, by a competent engineer, to determine whether a canal from Cleaveland's mill, along the north side of the Oriskany creek, in the town of Madison, and thence in the valley of Skenando creek, through the town of Augusta, to Vernon, and thence to some point on the Erie canal, is practicable and would be more for the interest of the state to construct, than the route through the vallies of the Oriskany and Sawquoit creeks; and if, after such examination, the commissioners shall be of opinion that it would be more for the interest of the state to adopt such route for the canal, than that of the Oriskany and Sawquoit, then they shall construct the same in the valley of the Skenando, instead of the valley of the Oriskany.

§ 3. The canal shall be constructed of the same width and depth as the Erie canal, and the locks shall be made of wood, supported by stone walls, in the manner recommended by Mr. Hutchinson, engineer, in the report of his survey, made during the fall of 1827, and presented to the legislature during the last session.

§ 4. The commissioners of the canal fund shall, from time to time, borrow, on the credit of the state, at an interest not exceeding five per cent., such sum or sums of money as shall be necessary to construct said canal, in amount not exceeding one million of dollars; for which monies, certificates of stock shall be issued, in the manner directed in and by the act entitled "An act to improve the funds and provide for the redemption of the funded debt of this state."

§ 5. All tolls to be collected upon the canal to be constructed by virtue of this act, are hereby appropriated and pledged for the interest and final liquidation of the principal of such sums borrowed; and such tolls shall at no time be less than those which now are, or hereafter may be, established by law, on the Erie and Champlain canals.

§ 7. The canal commissioners shall not proceed to construct said canal, unless they shall be first satisfied, by actual survey and estimates, that there will be an adequate supply of water for the summit level, without taking any of the waters of either the Oriskany or Sawquoit creeks, and that the cost of the construction of said canal will not exceed one million of dollars; and also that said canal will produce to the state, in connection with the increased tolls on the Erie canal, after paying interest upon cost, repairs, and expense of attendance, for the first ten years after its construction, four per cent annually upon the cost of its construction.

§ 8. For the purpose of ascertaining the practicability, cost and nett proceeds of said canal, the said commissioners shall cause the route of said canal to be carefully and fully surveyed, and estimates of the probable amount of revenue to be derived therefrom, to be made as early in the ensuing summer as practicable.

§ 9. If the canal commissioners shall be of opinion that the cost of the construction of said canal will exceed one million of dollars, or that there shall not be a sufficiency of water, or that it will not produce a revenue of four per cent on the cost of its construction, over and above interest, repairs and attendance, they shall report to the next legislature their surveys and estimates.

§ 1. The canal commissioners are hereby directed to cause a minute and accurate survey and estimate of the cost of constructing a canal, of the dimensions of the Erie canal, from the village of Binghamton in the county of Broome, through the valley of the Chenango river, to the Erie canal at or near the village of Utica; and that they make a full and detailed report of a working survey and estimate of said canal, to the next legislature, together with their opinion, and the facts upon which it is founded, as to the practicability of constructing said canal, and the amount of revenue to be derived therefrom.

§ 2. The reasonable expenses incurred in making such surveys and estimates, shall be audited and allowed by the comptroller, and paid out of the treasury of this state.

And also to strike out the title of the said amendment, and inserting instead thereof the words following, to wit:

The petition of sundry proprietors of lands lying along the East river in the county of Westchester, praying for the passage of a law to secure to them the use of oysters planted opposite to their lands, was read, and referred to a select committee, consisting of Mr. Davenport Mr. Jones and Mr. Wyckoff.

Mr. Randall, from the select committee to which was referred the petition of sundry inhabitants of the county of Montgomery, praying for the passage of a law authorising the appointment of inspectors of wood and timber in said county, reported:

That upon the examination of the subject referred to them, the following facts appear:

Great quantities of wood and timber are furnished by the inhabitants living on both sides of the canal in the county of Montgomery, in pursuance of contracts made with them by persons residing in the vicinity of the canal, and that this kind of traffic constitutes an important item of trade and transportation on the Erie canal. The wood and timber so contracted for and purchased, is generally designed for, and conveyed in boats to the Schenectady and Albany markets. As between the contracting parties, upon the banks of the canal and at the places designated for the delivery of the wood and timber, such inspectors may be important, and may prevent the occurrence of frequent litigations and differences in relation to the quality and quantity of the timber and wood so contracted for and delivered, the committee are of opinion that the prayer of the petitioners is reasonable, and ought to be granted, and ask leave to introduce a bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Randall, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to authorise the appointment of inspectors of wood and timber in the county of Montgomery;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

On motion of Mr. Mann,

A message from the Senate, delivered by their clerk, with the bill and amendments therein mentioned, was read, informing that they have passed the bill entitled "An act authorising the commissioners of the land-office to sell a certain lot of land," with the amendments therewith delivered.

The said bill and amendments were read; and the amendments having been again read and concurred in,

Ordered, That the clerk deliver the said bill and amendments to the Senate, and inform them that this house have concurred with them in their amendments to the said bill, and have amended the same accordingly.

A message from the Senate, delivered by their clerk, with the bill and a copy of the resolution therein mentioned, was read, informing that they have rejected the bill entitled "An act exempting clerks in post-offices from militia duty, on paying a commutation."

Seven several messages from the Senate, delivered by their clerk, with the bills therein mentioned, were read, informing that they have passed the bill entitled "An act authorising William Harrold to erect a dock on the south side of Musquito Cove creek, in the town of Oyster-Bay;" the bill entitled "An act for the relief of the heirs of William Jones, deceased;" the bill entitled "An act relative to the Chenango bridge company;" the bill entitled "An act concerning the appraisement of damages on the canals, and the compensation allowed to the canal appraisers;" the bill entitled "An act to compensate jurors in the county of Rensselaer;" the bill entitled "An act altering the October term of the court of general sessions of the peace in the county of Delaware;" and the bill entitled "An act concerning the state prisons of this state;" in which bills they request the concurrence of this house.

The said bills were severally read the first time, and by unanimous consent were also read a second time, and the bill entitled "An act authorising William Harrold to erect a dock on the south side of Musquito Cove creek, in the town of Oyster-Bay," was referred to a select committee, consisting of Mr. Jones, Mr. Williamson and Mr. Hedges; the bill entitled "An act for the relief of the heirs of William Jones, deceased," was referred to a select committee, consisting of Mr. Cargill, Mr. Arnold and Mr. Dayton; the bill entitled "An act relative to the Chenango bridge company," was referred to a select committee, consisting of the members attending this house from the county of Chenango; the bill entitled "An act concerning the appraisement of damages on canals, and the compensation allowed to the canal appraisers," was referred to a select committee, consisting of Mr. Johnson, Mr. Dana and Mr. Eldridge; the bill entitled "An act to compensate jurors in the county of Rensselaer," was referred to a select committee, consisting of Mr. Heermans, Mr. Mallory and Mr. Barnett; the bill entitled "An act altering the October term of the court of general sessions of the peace in the county of Delaware," was referred to a select committee, consisting of Mr. McCrea, Mr. Soper and Mr. Austin; and the bill entitled "An act concerning the state prisons of this state," was referred to a select committee, consisting of Mr. W. K. Fuller, Mr. Titus and Mr. Tailor, severally to consider and report thereon.

Mr. Sceley, from the committee on engrossed bills, reported, that they have examined the engrossed bill entitled "An act to incorporate the New-York African Clarkson association," and find the same correctly engrossed.

Ordered, That the same be laid upon the table.

The house then proceeded to the consideration of the amendment offered by Mr. Mann to the report of the committee of the whole, on the bill entitled "An act authorising the construction of the Chenango canal;" and in proceeding upon the said amendment and report, Mr. Mann made a motion that the house should agree to lay the same upon the table.

Debates were had upon the said motion of Mr. Mann; and the question being put whether the house would agree thereto, it was determined in the negative.

The petition of the board of trustees of the village of Buffalo, praying for an amendment to the act incorporating said village, was read, and referred to the committee on the incorporation of cities and villages.

The petition and affidavit of Ogden Mallory, praying compensation for losses sustained in the construction of locks on the Oswego canal, was read, and referred to the committee on canals and internal improvements.

The petition of Justus Squire and others, inhabitants of the towns of Lexington, Hunter and Windham, in the county of Greene, praying for the incorporation of a company for the purpose of constructing a certain turnpike road, was read, and referred to the committee on the establishment and improvement of roads and bridges, and the incorporation of turnpike companies.

The petition of sundry inhabitants of the county of Suffolk, praying for the passage of a law to provide for the appointment of inspectors of wood in and for said county, was read, and referred to a select committee, consisting of Mr. Williamson, Mr. Hedges and Mr. Wheeler.

The petition of sundry inhabitants of the counties of Orleans, Genesee and Cattaraugus, praying for the appointment of commissioners to lay out a public highway from the village of Albion, in the county of Orleans, to Olean, in the county of Cattaraugus, was read, and referred to the committee on the establishment and improvement of roads and bridges, and the incorporation of turnpike companies.

The petition of the supervisor, justices and town officers of the town of Columbia, in the county of Herkimer, praying that part of a certain road in said county may be discontinued, was read, and referred to the committee on the establishment and improvement of roads and bridges, and the incorporation of turnpike companies.

Mr. Savage, from the committee on grievances, on the petition of Joseph E. Smith, praying that the canal board may be authorised to settle his claim for damages sustained on the Oswego canal, asked leave to report by bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Savage, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act authorising the canal board to settle with Joseph E. Smith & Co. upon equitable terms;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Al Burtis, from the committee on the incorporation of charitable and religious societies, to which was referred the petition of the trustees of the Reformed Presbyterian Congregation in the town of Galway, in the county of Saratoga, reported:

That the said trustees, in their petition, set forth, that John Burns, formerly a ruling elder in said church, now deceased, late of the town of Milton, did, by his last will and testament, an exemplified copy of which is annexed to the petition, by which it appears that the said John Burns made a devise in the words, and figures, following, to wit: 3d. I leave for the support of religion, this part of the vineyard, known by the name of the Galloway and Milton, and that part of the Reformed Presbyterian church, with which I am now connected, the other half of all my property, of which I die possessed, both landed and moveable property, at the decease of my wife. And that the widow of the said John Burns died on the ninth day of December last, leaving the undivided one half of the farm undisposed of, and of which said farm John Burns died seized in fee, lying in the town of Milton, as aforesaid.

The petitioners further set forth, that the said John Burns died without any children or heirs, according to the best of their knowledge and belief. The committee are of opinion that the prayer of the petitioners is reasonable, and ought to be granted; they have prepared a bill accordingly, and directed their chairman to ask leave to introduce the same.

Ordered. That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Al Burtis, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act for the relief of the trustees of the Reformed Presbyterian congregation in Galway;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Johnson, from the committee on canals and internal improvements, to whom was referred the petition of sundry inhabitants of the counties of Erie and Niagara, residing on the borders of the Tonnewanta creek, and the report of the canal commissioners on the said petition, reported:

That the petitioners represent, that the dam erected at the mouth of Tonnewanta creek, has raised the water about four feet above its former level, and has overflown the adjoining lands, which are low and marshy, and has rendered them unfit for cultivation, &c.

The only information that has been presented to the committee, is the petition and the report of the canal commissioners. The canal commissioners, in their report, remark, that "the country along the Tonnewanta creek and in its vicinity, is low and swampy, and has ever been subject to inundations and to sickness in summer and autumn. But it is probable that these evils have been augmented by the erection of the above mentioned dam, and the consequent elevation of the water for several miles above it. The water, during the last year, has been uncommonly high, and has overflowed the land to a considerable extent. This has been occasioned by the extraordinary rains of the last summer, and also by the manner in which the dam was originally built, which did not admit of a reduction of its surface in times of high water. The upper part of this work has since been reconstructed in such a manner as to admit of its reduction during floods. This will in some measure obviate the evils of which the petitioners complain."

The commissioners conclude by saying, that the evils complained of cannot be entirely obviated without abandoning a considerable part of the navigation of the Tonnewanta creek, and substituting other works at great expense.

The committee are of opinion that the prayer of the petitioners ought not to be granted; and they recommend that the petitioners have leave to withdraw their petition.

Thereupon,

Resolved, That the petitioners have leave to withdraw their petition.

Mr. Skinner, from the committee on colleges, academies and common schools, to which was referred the petition of the trustees of Union Literary society, in the county of Jefferson, the petition of the trustees of Governeur high school, in the county of St. Lawrence, praying for a grant from lots reserved for literary purposes, and the petition of the trustees of Steuben academy, in the county of Oneida, praying for pecuniary aid, reported:

The several petitions set forth, that the literary institutions from which they come, have been incorporated by the legislature; commodious buildings have been erected, and a system of instruction established, highly useful to the communities where they are located; that they have been established by the liberality and enterprise of individuals, and that they are much in need of funds for the purpose of increasing the facilities of instruction, extending their influence, and placing them upon a permanent foundation.

From the facts disclosed, the committee are satisfied that these institutions are eminently useful, and highly deserving of public patronage; but after an attentive examination of the subject, with a sincere and anxious desire to support and cherish institutions so well calculated to extend the means of education and to improve the condition of common schools, they are constrained to state to the house, that they have been unable to discover any funds which can be consistently applied to this object.

They have directed their attention to the literature lots referred to in the petitions, and have called upon the Surveyor-General, by a resolution, for information in regard to those lots; which was answered by a report of the 31st of January, but which is not very specific or satisfactory upon some of the inquiries embraced in the resolution. It appears that all the literature lots are pledged to the state for the sum of seven thousand five hundred dollars, heretofore advanced to Lowville, Middlebury, Red-Hook and St. Lawrence academies, from the general fund, on account of appropriations before made to those academies, to be paid from the sales of literature lots not appropriated to the literature fund.

It also appears by a reference to the several acts under which those advancements were made from the treasury, that bonds were required from the trustees of those academies, pledging their responsibility in their individual and corporate capacity, to make up the deficiency in case the lots upon which those appropriations were chargeable, should not sell for sufficient to repay the sum advanced.

Under these circumstances, the committee have supposed that a grant by the state, of any one of those lots, would, in effect, destroy the validity of the bonds above referred to; and whatever may have been the policy of taking them, or the probability of their being enforced if forfeited, the committee do not feel willing to recommend a measure tending to defeat those securities.

The appraised value of the unappropriated lots exceeds the sums advanced; but from the best information the committee have been able to obtain on the subject, it is extremely questionable whether they will ever produce the amount already charged upon them. In coming to the conclusion which they have adopted, the committee feel much relieved by the consideration, that the petitioners can avail themselves of the benefit of the literature fund, to which one hundred and fifty thousand dollars was added in the year 1827, the income of which is annually distributed by the Regents of the University to the several incorporated seminaries in the state, (excluding colleges.) They have directed their chairman to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the petitioners have leave to withdraw their petition.

Thereupon,

Mr. Speaker put the question whether the house would agree to the said resolution, and it was determined in the affirmative.

Mr. Mallory, from the committee on the incorporation and alteration of the charters of banking and insurance companies, on the petition of the Troy water-works company, praying to be incorporated, asked leave to report by bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Mallory, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to incorporate the Troy water-works company;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Franklin, from the committee on trade and manufactures, on the petition of sundry distillers, praying an amendment of the act relative to the inspection of distilled spirits, and the remonstrance of dealers in that article, asked leave to report by bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Franklin, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to amend article eleventh of title second of chapter seventeenth of the first part of the Revised Statutes;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Ordered, That the usual number of copies of the said bill be printed for the use of the legislature.

Mr. Jones, from the select committee to which was referred the petition of sundry inhabitants of the town of Oysterbay in the county of Queens, praying that George D. Coles may be authorised to erect a dock opposite to his lands in said town, reported:

That they have had the same under consideration; and from the facts set forth by the petitioners in relation to this subject, they are of the opinion that the inhabitants of this section of country have long labored under the inconvenience of not having a good and permanent dock; and that it is the intention of the said George D. Coles to erect a wharf or dock sixty feet in width, and extending from high water mark in a southerly and westerly direction, into Hempsted harbor, five hundred feet, near a place called Cape Breton.

It does not appear to the committee, that in the constructing of the proposed wharf, it will interfere with the navigation in any shape whatever; but on the contrary, vessels would be enabled to load and discharge their cargoes with more facility and less expense.

And inasmuch as the said George D. Coles intends running a market boat from thence to New-York, it would furnish a cheap and ready conveyance for the farmer to transport his produce to market. And the committee think proper to add, that the said George D. Coles has it also in contemplation to run a steam-boat from said wharf to the city of New-York; evidently an additional accommodation, not only of a local nature, but of infinite advantage to the community at large.

Under these circumstances, the committee can see no just cause why the prayer of the petitioners should not be granted, and ask leave to introduce a bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Jones, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act authorising George D. Coles to erect a dock in the town of Oysterbay;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Jones, from the select committee to which was referred the petition of Jonathan Peck and others, praying that a law may be passed, authorising them to erect a wharf in the town of Flushing, reported:

That the committee have had the same under consideration; and that it appears, several of the petitioners have, at considerable expense, bought lands adjoining Flushing creek, in order to erect a good and sufficient dock or wharf for the accommodation of vessels that may require to load or discharge their cargoes at that place.

The petitioners propose to construct said dock in the following manner: To commence at a place known as the most southerly corner of the store-house dock, and extending a northerly course three hundred and fifty-five feet, and twenty feet below the ordinary low water mark in the waters of Flushing creek.

It is the opinion of the committee, that in the erection of this dock or wharf, the navigation will in no wise be subject to inconvenience; inasmuch as the creek in this place is from twenty to five and twenty rods wide. It does also appear that most of the inhabitants of the town of Flushing are anxious that such dock or wharf should be completed, from the fact that it would be of public utility.

Under these circumstances, the committee think the prayer of the petitioners ought to be granted, and ask leave to introduce a bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Jones, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act authorising Jonathan Peck and his associates to erect a dock in the town of Flushing;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Johnson, from the select committee to which was referred the engrossed bill from the Senate, entitled "An act concerning the appraisement of damages on the canals, and the compensation allowed to the canal appraisers," reported, that they have examined the said bill, and see no reason why the same should not be passed into a law.

Ordered, That the said bill be committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Cargill, from the select committee to which was referred the engrossed bill from the Senate, entitled "An act for the relief of the heirs of William Jones deceased," reported, that they have examined the said bill, and see no reason why the same should not be passed into a law.

Ordered, That the said bill be committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Heermans, from the select committee to which was referred the engrossed bill from the Senate, entitled "An act to compensate jurors in the county of Rensselaer," reported, that they have examined the said bill, and see no reason why the same should not be passed into a law.

Ordered, That the said bill be committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Dayton, from the select committee, consisting of the delegation from the city and county of New-York, to which was referred the memorial of the mayor, aldermen and commonalty of the said city, praying for the passage of a law authorising a tax for the purpose of meeting the public expenses for the ensuing year, reported as follows:

It appears to the committee, that the memorialists have made their usual estimate of the probable expenses which will be incurred during the next year, in the regulation and government of the said city; are of opinion that a sum not less than four hundred and fifty thousand dollars, will be requisite to meet the various expenditures to which they are subjected. In forming this estimate, the memorialists allege that they have been influenced by a due regard to economy, and a desire to lessen the burthen upon the citizens; and the committee are gratified to perceive, that notwithstanding the rapid increase of population and business in that city, the sum which the memorialists ask leave to raise for the coming year, does not exceed that which was authorised for the last year.

Inasmuch as the supervisors of the said city and county have no power to levy a tax to defray the public expenses, the corporation are under the necessity of making an annual application to the legislature for permission to raise the requisite amount for that purpose.

The committee are of opinion that the prayer of the memorialists ought to be granted; and they have accordingly prepared a bill in the usual form, which they ask leave to introduce.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Dayton, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to enable the mayor, aldermen and commonalty of the city of New-York, to raise money by a tax;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

A communication from the attorney-general, was read in the words following, to wit:

The Attorney-General, in obedience to a resolution of the Assembly, requesting him to report what measures in his opinion are proper to be pursued in relation to William L. Perce, confined in the jail of the county of Cayuga, on a suit in behalf of the people of this state, respectfully reports:

That in January, 1828, the late Comptroller made a report relative to the expenditure of monies on the canals, (Ass. Jour. 1828, p. 116,) showing that William L. Perce, as superintendent of repairs on the Erie canal, had defrauded the state of large sums of money, by means of false and double vouchers. In April of the same year, (Journal, p. 1204,) the Assembly passed a resolution, referring the report of the Comptroller, and the petition of Perce, to the Attorney-General, with directions to "institute such proceedings, civil and criminal, against the said William L. Perce, as he might deem warranted by the facts of the case and the law of this state." In pursuance of this resolution, a suit was instituted against Perce to recover back the monies he had wrongfully obtained from the state; and a judgment against him has been perfected at the present term of the supreme court, for forty thousand dollars damages, and forty dollars and fifteen cents costs of suit. The Attorney-General is informed that his predecessor in office expressed an opinion that no criminal proceedings against Perce could be sustained; and the fact that none were commenced, is of itself a sufficient indication that such was his opinion.

The "measures proper to be pursued" for the collection of the debt, are such as are common to other cases—executions against the property and body of the defendant. That such measures will prove successful, is rendered highly improbable from the fact that Perce is generally believed to be destitute of property or other means of satisfying the judgment.

All which is respectfully submitted,

GREENE C. BRONSON, Attorney-General.

March 6th, 1829.

Ordered, That the said communication be committed to a committee of the whole when on the bill upon that subject.

Mr. Burt, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to incorporate the East-kill turnpike road company;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Johnson, from the committee on canals and internal improvements, to which were referred the memorials of the inhabitants of the counties of Oneida, Lewis, Jefferson and St. Lawrence, praying for the construction of the Black river canal, from Rome in the county of Oneida, to the foot of the high falls of the Black river in the county of Lewis, and to improve the navigation of said river, reported:

That they have examined attentively the subject embraced in the memorials referred to them, and have received such information as the agents representing the interests of the memorialists, had to offer.

The route in question, was one of those surveyed by Mr. Geddes in 1825; and his report may be found in the Journals of the Assembly for 1826, Appendix F. page 2. Mr. Geddes represents the undertaking as practicable, although the amount of lockage is very great. Applications, since that time, have been made for the construction of a canal at the expense of the state, until the session of 1828, when an application was made for an act of incorporation for a private company, and the same was granted.

The commissioners named in the bill, caused the route to be examined, an accurate estimate of the cost of the work to be made, books to be opened for the subscription to the stock; and used, as the agents of the memorialists represent, all the means in their power to carry the law into operation. This, however, they were unable to accomplish; and the reason they assign for their failure, is, that individuals were unwilling to engage in a work, the whole cost of which they were to pay, and receive only a part of the advantages to be derived from it. The persons interested in this work, are willing to relinquish their charter, provided the legislature will authorise the construction of the work at the expense of the state. (See Document C.) The people of that section of the state, feel that they are justified in calling upon the legislature to share in its liberalities, and that they have a right to ask to be placed upon an equality with other portions of the state, in facility of access to market.

It cannot be necessary for the committee again to express their views on the propriety of the state's continuing her splendid system of internal improvements. The only inquiries necessary to be made, where subjects of this kind are presented to the consideration of the legislature, are—Is the object proposed practicable; and will it produce a return to your treasury, sufficient to pay the interest on the cost of its construction, its annual repairs, and eventually reimburse the principal? And will the funds of the state warrant the undertaking? As to the last point, the committee would refer to their report upon the Chenango canal, where their views upon this subject may be found, and from which it appears that there is no objection on the account of funds to construct works of this kind.

As to the practicability of this work, the committee refer to the report of Mr. Geddes, made in 1826; and to that of Mr. Cruger, who surveyed the route last summer, and whose report is annexed, marked A.; and the letter of Judge Wright, marked B.

The supply of water, Judge Wright says, is abundant at all times; and there may be water brought from the Black river to the summit level, sufficient for a great number of hydraulic works, over and above the necessary supply for the purposes of navigation: In short, he says, "there is not a doubt about an ample supply for every purpose required."

The extent of canal to be made is thirty-three miles seventy-eight chains, a navigable feeder of eleven miles and eight chains, and a river navigation of forty miles. The whole lockage is one thousand and ninety feet; one thousand and fifteen feet of which, Mr. Cruger proposes to overcome by inclined planes; the residue, seventy-five feet, by locks. The dimensions of the canal, as surveyed and estimated by Mr. Cruger, are twenty-five feet wide on the bottom; depth of water, four feet; a slope of one and a half horizontal to one perpendicular, making consequently a water line of thirty-two feet. The dimensions of the locks should be seven and a half feet wide, and seventy feet length of chamber in the clear. This is sufficient for the passage of boats of twenty to twenty-three tons, which is as large a size as can conveniently use the inclined planes. It is believed by many engaged in transportation, that boats of the above size are more advantageous for navigating canals, than those of larger size, and that they will eventually supersede the use of larger boats.

Mr. Cruger has minutely examined the whole route of the proposed work, and his estimate will be found to be made in detail, and with sufficient minuteness. The cost of the whole work he estimates as follows:

	Distances.		Culverts.	Dams.	Waste weirs	Bridges.	Descent by planes.	Descent by locks.	Cost
	M.	Ch.
Feeder,	11	08	1	2	2	7	....	..	$40,497 15
S. Sec.	21	13	3	4	4	28	635	65	219,998 62
N. Sec.	12	65	5	2	1	17	380	10	116,644 20
Total,	44	86	9	8	7	52	1015	75	376,139 97

Add 10 per cent. for incidentals,	37,620 19
" 5 " for engineers, superint'ds. &c.	18,810 09
Total cost of canal,	$433,571 25
Improvement of the river,	4,168 00
Total cost of navigation from Rome to Carthage, a distance of 85 miles,	$437,739 25

Distance.	Miles.	Chains.
Canal, ...	33	78
Navigable feeder, ...	11	08
River, ...	40	00
	85	06

As to the sufficiency of the above estimate, the engineer says, his object was to fall into no exaggeration in favor of the work; but, on the contrary, to present an estimate that will rather exceed, than fall short of the actual cost. Judge Wright also says: "Having been for more than thirty years intimately acquainted with the formation of the country through which the proposed canal is to pass, and surveyed into farms the greater part of the route, the descriptions of the country as given me by Mr. Cruger, are familiar and perfectly understood. In regard to the estimate of expense of constructing the work, as made out by Mr. Cruger, I have perfect confidence in the amount being sufficient to construct the work in the manner he has proposed."

Mr. Geddes' estimate of a canal, with wooden locks at $150 a foot lift, is $453,391.

At the request of the friends of the application, the committee have made some calculations as to the annual expense of the work, and also some estimates of the revenue it may be expected to yield.

The expense of construction on Mr. Cruger's plan, would amount, according to his estimate, to about $440,000.

Interest on $440,000, at 5 per cent, ...	$22,000 00
Attendance, 8 locks and 13 inclined planes, 1 man to each, eight months, at $20, ...	3,300 00
Repairs of 45 miles canal, at $200, ...	9,000 00
locks and planes, $186,400, at 3 per cent, ...	5,592 00
Total yearly cost of 85 miles navigation, ...	$39,952 00

The revenue may be estimated on the basis of population, as follows:

¼ Oneida, ...	14,437
Lewis, ...	11,669
½ Jefferson, ...	20,825
⅓ St. Lawrence, ...	9,198
Increase according to the census of 1825, ...	17,183
	73,312

The tolls on the Erie canal in 1827 at Utica, and all places of collection west, to Buffalo, were $534,593; and the population west of Oneida and Madison, including Oneida, was, by the census of 1825, 530,704. In this proportion, the tolls from the proposed work would be	$73,900 00

Add ¼ for ascending trade, ...	18,440 00
	$92,400 00
And as the Black river country sends its productions to Rome and Utica, and probably does not pay more than one quarter of the tolls collected at those offices, a deduction of	22,776 00
would be equal to the amount now paid by the Black river country; and	69,624 00 would be the increase of revenue from the proposed work. And if the yearly cost of the navigation, ...	39,952 00
is deducted, there will remain a yearly balance of	$29,672 00

towards redeeming the principal of the debt.

Another view of the subject of revenue, will be found in the calculation made by Judge Wright, and contained in his letter accompanying this report; according to which, the whole amount of toll on this navigation to tide water, is estimated at $97,316.

And in addition to these estimates, when we consider the great extent of good land as yet unsettled in the Black river country, its healthy climate, and abundance of ore, lumber and water power, and compare its natural advantages with those of the country extending from Rome 80 miles west, as shewn by their comparative prosperity before the construction of the Erie canal; and when we observe the effects which a ready communication has in calling natural resources into action, as shewn by their present comparative prosperity, and refer to the tolls from that part of the Erie canal, paying equally with the proposed route on an average distance of 180 miles, and recollect how large a proportion of the tolls on any canal come from its immediate vicinity, no doubt can exist that the revenue from a navigation leaving the Erie canal at right angles, and liable to no rival route, will soon reimburse the expense of constructing and maintaining the work.

As to the other advantages of the work, it would, like others of the same kind, increase the value of all the preceding works with which it is connected.

It would also have several peculiar advantages; among which are the increased value of the public lands. The Moose river tract alone contains 219,000 acres, estimated at thirty cents. To this tract there are now no means of access; it is consequently unsaleable, and not increasing in value: the canal passes within twenty miles of the land, and would probably bring it into market at an early day and advanced price. This canal would also afford a permanent and ample supply of water to the Rome level of the Erie canal; which, as transportation increases and the streams diminish, becomes every year of more consequence.

In the opinion of the memorialists, it would also assist in securing the northern frontier, which can not be effectually done without a naval force on Lake Ontario, for which Sacket's Harbor is the most suitable station. This post was so important during the late war, that the amount paid for transportation of warlike stores through the Black river country, is believed to have exceeded two million of dollars. Application was made for information on this subject to the Secretary of War, but it was not in the power of the department to furnish the information.

Since that period, many valuable improvements have been made near the lake, particularly some of the most important works on the Erie canal, as the locks at Lockport, the aqueduct over the Genesee river, and the Irondequoit embankment, which are so situated that they are exposed to be destroyed by an enemy having command of the lake, before the means of resisting the attack, or even of intercepting his return, could be provided.

The great amount of lockage in proportion to the length of the canal, renders it very desirable to provide some means of overcoming the elevation, more advantageous than the common lock. It is proposed to substitute inclined planes. Mr. Cruger, who has been employed two years on the Morris canal, and has seen the construction and operation of the first plane, has the fullest confidence in them, as a certain, cheap, and expeditious mode of overcoming great elevations; and he is of opinion that they will be adopted on all canals for the navigation of boats of twenty-five tons, on which there are great elevations to overcome. He is further of opinion, that the great amount of lockage in this canal is so reduced by the inclined planes, as to be equivalent in expense of construction to a canal of the same length with only 455 feet lockage, estimating locks at 400 dollars a foot lift, and equivalent in time to one of equal length with only 300 feet lockage.

Judge Wright remarks, that the inclined planes have not been used in this country except on the Morris canal, where the experiment which he saw in August last, satisfied him that they might be adopted with economy, compared with locks, and with a very great saving of time in passing boats, and also in daily attendance and expense.

During the present session of the legislature of New-Jersey, a joint committee of the council and assembly were appointed to examine the Morris canal and inclined planes. In their report, February 2, they say, "Nothing was more interesting and satisfactory, than the operation of the inclined plane at Boonton, by which an elevation of eighty feet in height was surmounted by a plane of eight hundred feet in length. The boat in which the committee passed over the plane, was sixty feet in length, and eight and a half in width; had in her eighteen tons of stone and one hundred passengers, and was carried over in fourteen minutes, while at the same time an empty car descended: had the descending car contained a loaded boat, the descent would no doubt have been accomplished in a shorter time. The committee do not entertain the smallest doubt of the practicability of inclined planes thus applied, and of their superiority over locks in overcoming great elevations, as respects economy in time and a saving in water: their success will, we believe, exceed the most sanguine expectations of their advocates."

We learn from Mr. Colden, president of the Morris canal company, that they are now constructing several planes of improved pattern, and which will be completed by June next, and which promise, in his opinion, to be a great improvement. He thinks those they are now constructing, will not cost more than $100 to $125 a foot lift; and that they will be so vastly preferable to locks, as to supersede their use.

It is also to be noticed, that a lock can only be ready for passing in one direction; and if a boat arrives in an opposite direction, time and water must be employed to prepare the lock for passing; while an inclined plane, when not in use, is ready for passing in either or both directions.

The following estimate will show, as nearly as can be done with the information at present before the committee, the comparative expense of constructing and maintaining inclined planes and locks of 80 feet lift:

Locks.

80 feet, at 250 dollars,	$20,000 00
Contingencies, 10 per cent,	2,000 00

Inclined Planes.

80 feet, at 150 dollars,	$12,000 00

Yearly difference of 80 feet lift,	$1,144 00

Equal, at 5 per cent, to a principal of $286 per foot lift.

The superiority of inclined planes over locks, is so great in the opinion of the memorialists, as to offer an important reason for constructing the work, not only on account of the advantages to be derived in the first instance, but also for the purpose of introducing into this state a mode of canalling applicable to many other parts of the state in which it is desirable to construct canals, and in which the principal objections arise from the great elevations to be surmounted.

The committee are not prepared to recommend to the legislature the immediate commencement of this work. They do not believe that this country has as yet sufficient evidence on the subject of inclined planes as a substitute for locks, to adopt them without further examination. This canal, as surveyed by Mr. Cruger, is considerably smaller than the Erie canal; and the propriety of adopting a canal of less dimensions, should, in the opinion of the committee, be submitted to the canal commissioners. Should they be of opinion that it would not be proper for the state to adopt the proposed plan, then a new survey and estimate would be necessary. The persons seeking this improvement, are willing that this course should be adopted; and the committee therefore recommend to the house the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolved, (if the Hon. the Senate concur,) That the canal commissioners cause a route of a canal from Rome to the high falls of the Black river, to be surveyed, and estimates of the cost of constructing the same to be made; and also for improving the navigation of the river to Carthage, if they shall be of opinion that the dimensions of the canal as proposed by Mr. Cruger, will not answer, or that the surveys made by him are insufficient for them to report upon.

Resolved, That the canal commissioners cause an examination to be made as to the comparative advantages of inclined planes and locks in overcoming great elevations, the difference of time in passing from one level to another, and of expense of constructing and maintaining them.

Resolved, That the canal commissioners report on the above to the next legislature; also their opinion as to the propriety of adopting inclined planes on the proposed canal; also the probable revenue to be derived from the work, taking into consideration the additional tolls that will be received on the Erie canal; and such other information on the subject as they may obtain, and deem worthy the attention of the legislature.

[For the Documents referred to in the preceding Report, see Appendix G.]

Ordered, That the said report and resolutions be committed to a committee of the whole house; and that the usual number of copies thereof, together with the documents accompanying the same, be printed for the use of the legislature.

Mr. Judd, from the committee on medical subjects, to whom was referred the petition of Abraham Chase, praying to be admitted to an examination before the medical society of the county of Tompkins, reported:

The petition sets forth that the petitioner studied medicine with one Doct. Consider Morgan, in the county of Dutchess, in this state, more than thirty years ago, during a period of more than three years; that in consequence of the sudden death of said Doct. Morgan, he has been unable to procure a certificate of such term of study; that the petitioner commenced the practice of physic and surgery immediately after the death of the said Morgan, and has continued such practice ever since.

The above facts are supported by the affidavit of the petitioner; and the prayer of the petitioner is united in by many of the principal physicians of the county of Tompkins.

In coming to a conclusion upon this subject, the committee have directed their inquiries to the reasons for the laws regulating the practice of physic and surgery, and the acts incorporating medical societies in this state. And the result of such inquiry has been the conviction, that such laws are enacted to prevent the imposition of ignorant and unqualified empirics upon the public, under the name of doctor, and to provide a means for testing the qualifications of candidates for this important profession, before a competent tribunal.

The different laws upon this subject, have from time to time provided a certain term for study and tuition of the candidates with regular physicians, varying from three to four years, before they were admitted to an examination before the censors of the medical society; at which examination they must be approved as competent, before they can receive a diploma.

The committee are of opinion that the most important, and by far the most useful of these provisions, is the examination and approval of the candidate by the medical censors.

The petitioner, praying for nothing more than to be permitted to an examination before the competent authority, as a candidate for a diploma, the committee are of opinion that his request ought to be granted; and have accordingly prepared a bill, which they ask leave to introduce.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Judd, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act for the relief of Abraham Chase;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Dayton, from the committee on the incorporation and alteration of the charters of banking and insurance companies, to whom was referred the petition of William Williams, receiver of the bank of Niagara, praying a relinquishment by the state of a certain debt due from the said bank, and a re-assignment of the collateral security given for the payment thereof, reported:

It appears to the committee, that the bank of Niagara, being indebted to the state in the sum of $14,869 on the 10th day of September, A. D. 1819, executed to the state a bond, conditioned for the payment of the said debt, with the interest to become due thereon, accompanied by the following collateral security, viz:

A bond of the president and directors of the said bank, secured by a mortgage upon four several parcels of land, for.....	$8,500 00
An assignment of a bond and mortgage of one E. S. Stuart, for...	1,200 00
An assignment of a bond of Chilion Mullet, secured by a mortgage of G. Folsom, for	982 31
An assignment of a judgment against N. Leonard, for.....	5,448 34
	$16,130 65

It further appears, that the mortgages above mentioned were foreclosed in the years 1821 and 1822, and the mortgaged premises purchased by the state for a nominal sum; and that the land embraced in the Folsom mortgage was sold by the state in the year 1824, for the sum of $1,000.

In the year 1825, an act was passed by the legislature, directing the re-conveyance to the said bank of all the mortgaged premises above mentioned, except the part comprised in the Folsom mortgage, which had been sold as aforesaid, and the re-assignment also of the said judgment, upon payment by the bank of all sums due from it to the state, with the costs, &c. within four months after the passage of the said act.

In partial compliance with the terms of this act, the bank, within the limited time, paid to the state the principal debt, and the further sum of $762, for bills of the bank received into the public treasury, between the 10th day of Sept. A. D. 1819, and the 21st day of March, A. D. 1820, amounting together to the sum of $15,631; but inasmuch as the conditions of the law were not fully performed, the said re-conveyance and re-assignment were not executed.

In the year 1827, upon the application of the bank, another act was passed, directing the same re-conveyance and re-assignment mentioned in the former act, upon the payment by the bank of $6,240 64, the balance of interest due, (after deducting the proceeds of the sale of the land contained in the Folsom mortgage,) together with other small sums mentioned in the said act, which condition has never been complied with, either in whole or in part, by the bank.

Under this state of facts, the petitioner, who is the receiver of the said bank, solicits a relinquishment by the state of the balance due, which, including interest, would now amount to about $7,500, and that the commissioners of the land-office may be directed to convey to him, the said receiver, the lands which were so mortgaged to the state, and afterwards purchased by it, except the part contained in the Folsom mortgage, which was sold as aforesaid; and that the comptroller may be directed to assign to him the said judgment against Leonard.

In 1825, the premises purchased by the attorney-general for the state, excluding the part contained in the Folsom mortgage, were appraised by persons appointed for that purpose by the surveyor-general, at $6,877. The present value, as estimated by the petitioner, is about $6,700; but the title of the state to a portion thereof, valued by the petitioner at $3,600, is said by him to be doubtful, if not positively defective. The land which is bound by the judgment against Leonard, and which is all that renders that judgment of any value, is estimated by the petitioner at $3,300.

The grounds upon which the petitioner asks relief are, that the state, by proper attention and diligence, might have received from the various premises covered by the said mortgages and judgment, from six hundred to a thousand dollars per annum, which would have nearly or quite discharged the debt, instead of which, nothing has been received; and that unless means are speedily adopted for securing the said property, a large portion of it will be lost, both to the state and to the bank.

The committee do not perceive the force of these reasons, nor do they think that under existing circumstances, the receiver has any equitable claim to relief, beyond the provisions of the act of 1827. All the inconvenience and loss which the bank may have sustained, in being deprived of the profits of the lands covered by the mortgages and judgment above mentioned, have arisen from its neglect to pay a just debt; and however inattentive to its own interests the state may have been, this circumstance affords no just ground of complaint on the part of the petitioner, nor is it any reason why the state should relinquish the debt due to it, for the benefit of other creditors of the bank. Besides, as a portion of the mortgaged land was purchased by the state antecedently to the adoption of the present constitution, the proceeds thereof are by instrument inviolably appropriated to the school fund; and the committee are of opinion that the legislature have no power to dispose of that part of the property, without a fair equivalent, which would preclude the gratuitous re-assignment solicited by the petitioner.

The committee are therefore of opinion, that the prayer of the petitioner ought not to be granted.

Thereupon,

Mr. Speaker put the question whether the house would agree with the committee in their said report, and it was determined in the affirmative.

Mr. Skinner, from the select committee to which was referred the engrossed bill from the Senate, entitled "An act to preserve the purity of elections," reported, that they have examined the said bill, and see no reason why the same should not be passed into a law.

Ordered, That the said bill be committed to a committee of the whole house.

Ordered, That the committee on canals and internal improvements, be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Ogden Mallory, praying compensation for losses sustained by him in the construction of locks on the Oswego canal; and that the said petition be referred to the canal commissioners.

Mr. Johnson gave notice that he would ask leave to introduce a bill, for the appointment of an inspector of lumber at New-London in the county of Oneida.

Mr. Savage gave notice that he would, on some future day, ask leave to bring in a bill to incorporate a fire company in the town of New-Hartford in the county of Oneida.

Mr. Mann gave notice that he would, on some future day, ask leave to bring in a bill to amend the revised statutes, concerning the appraisal and payment of damages on the canals.

The annual report of Nehemiah Brown junior, an inspector of beef and pork for the county of Westchester, was read, in the words following, to wit:

A communication from Samuel A. Talcott, one of the regents of the university, was read, in the words following, to wit:

Washington, March 2, 1829.

SIR,

As I find it will be impossible for me, without serious inconvenience, to give that attention which I could wish, to the duties of the office of regent of the university, permit me to request that you will communicate this to the Honorable the Assembly, as my resignation of that office.

I have the honor to be,
Very respectfully,
Your obedient servant,
SAMUEL A. TALCOTT.

The Honorable the Speaker of the Assembly of the State of New-York.

Three several messages from the Senate, delivered by their clerk, with the bills therein mentioned, were read, informing that they have passed the bill entitled "An act to continue the act for the employment of counsel for the purposes therein mentioned;" the bill entitled "An act to incorporate the Presbyterian church of Peekskill;" and the bill entitled "An act for the relief of William C. Housman and James A. Housman;" in which bills they request the concurrence of this house.

The said bills were severally read the first time, and by unanimous consent were also read a second time, and the bill entitled "An act to continue the act for the employment of counsel for the purposes therein mentioned," was referred to a select committee, consisting of Mr. Hazeltine, Mr. Garbutt and Mr. Mixer; the bill entitled "An act to incorporate the Presbyterian church of Peekskill," was referred to a select committee, consisting of Mr. Brown, Mr. A. Smith and Mr. Davenport; and the bill entitled "An act for the relief of William C. Housman and James A. Housman," was referred to a select committee, consisting of Mr. Jones, Mr. Vanderbilt and Mr. Dyckman; severally to consider and report thereon.

The Senate returned, by their clerk, the bill entitled "An act authorising the commissioners of the land-office to sell a certain lot of land."

Ordered, That the clerk deliver the said bill to the Governor.

A communication from the comptroller, was read, in the words following, to wit:

COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
Albany, March 9, 1829.

The Comptroller, in obedience to the resolution of the honorable the Assembly of the 5th inst., calling upon him to furnish to the house copies of certain papers on file in his office, enumerated in the said resolution, has the honor to submit the annexed papers, marked No. 1 to No. 6, inclusive, which embrace copies of all the papers, evidence and proceedings called for by the said resolution, and found upon the files of the office, and which are respectfully submitted.

SILAS WRIGHT, Jr.

To the Honorable Canal Board of the State of New-York:

The petition of the undersigned respectfully represents, that in the month of August, 1825, your petitioners contracted with Henry Seymour, Esq., acting commissioner on the Oswego canal, to construct and complete sections No. 6, 7 and 12 of the said canal, all of which have been completed except some trifling work on section No. 6, and the removing of a dam on No. 7, which they have been prevented from finishing by high water, and for the performance of which the engineer on said canal has retained a sufficient sum; that at the time of making said contract, your petitioners were induced to believe, not only from their own experience in the business of constructing canals, but from the representations of the state agents and engineers, and the opinions of other experienced persons, that the prices allowed by the said contract would amply remunerate them for its performance; but in consequence of the new directions subsequently received from the engineer, and of the work proving to be of a different character than was contemplated, your petitioners have been compelled, in the execution of said contract, to apply their private means and credit to a large amount; and unless extra allowances shall be made to them by the state, they will be subjected to great embarrassments and heavy losses.

The amount of indemnity asked for, and the particular items are as follows, viz:

For removing a large quantity of flood wood in the dead water of the Oswego river, not named in the contract; this claim of $500 erased, $500.*

Section No. 6.

For making tow-path on the bank of the river, which was abandoned by the engineer, and directions afterwards given to dock out into the river,.....	$250 00

Section No. 7.

The rock on this section was represented and believed to be freestone, and forty cents per cubic yard was allowed by the contract for its excavation; but at least one-third part of the excavation proved to be a hard flinty rock, and cost from 70 cents to $3.50 per cubic yard; for which an extra allowance is asked of	10,194 80
Carried forward,.....

* Note.—This entry of a claim as to section No. 6, appears in the original petition upon file in this office, erased precisely in the same manner it is in the foregoing copy; and the words "this claim of $500 erased," are also written upon the original petition in the same manner they are upon the copy. The comptroller has directed this erasure copied, because it appears that testimony was taken before the canal board in relation to section No. 6, and because he has no means of knowing whether this erasure was made before the taking of that testimony, and before the petition was presented, or during the hearing before the board, and after the examination of the engineer.

Brought forward, ...
The earth excavation of this section was believed to be loam and sand; but (excepting a small portion of the surface) turned out to be cemented gravel, quick-sand and clay; for which an extra allowance is asked of	1,700 00
For building a dam on the Oswego river, opposite J. Lyons' store-house, not contemplated by the contract, ...	120 00
Section No. 12.
For excavation of rock under water, not named as such in the contract, and for which only 35 cents per cubic yard has been received: and extra allowance of 40 cents per cubic yard is asked on 3,000 yards, amounting to	1,200 00
For building wall on this section, being an alteration of the contract, directed by the engineer; an extra allowance is asked of.	350 00

Your petitioners further claim indemnity for the building and sustaining a dam across the canal on section No. 7, to guard against the unusual high water in the spring of 1827, as also for the damage sustained thereby in the waste of the banks of the canal, partially constructed on the said section, of $200.

They also claim an extra allowance on the work generally, on sections No. 6 and 7. in addition to the amount claimed by the annexed petition, by reason of the extra expense, occasioned by the prevalent sickness during the seasons of 1826 and 1827, on those sections, $1,000 each. $2.000.

(NO. II.)

This article of agreement, made the 10th day of August, 1825, between Asa Cady, John Chapman, Hezekiah Sage, Lewis Beebe, Samuel Farwell, Jonathan Case and Abner P. Downer, of the one part, and the canal commissioners of the state of New-York of the other part, witnesseth: that the said Asa and associates above mentioned, covenant and agree to construct sections Nos. six, seven, and twelve, of the Oswego canal, in the following manner, to wit:

Section six, consisting of a towing-path on the margin of the Oswego river, with the necessary culverts and bridges, and including the removal of all timber in the river, on the margin of the towing-path, and the excavation of all earth or rock which may be required to give a sufficient depth of water for the purpose of navigation; the towing path shall be grubbed, cleared, and regularly formed to the width of twelve feet on the surface, and as nearly level as practicable.

For which the canal commissioners agree to pay the said Asa and his associates, on the completion of the aforesaid section, as follows, to wit: for constructing and completing the towing-path, at the rate of three dollars per rod; and for the excavation of the earth or gravel in the river, twenty-five cents per yard; and for rock in the river, fifty cents per yard.

Section No. seven, consisting of a towing-path, part of the way on the margin of the Oswego river, to be constructed similar to the one above mentioned, excavation of rock in the canal, gravel under water, excavation of earth, embankment, and a dam part of the way across the river, at the top of the Oswego falls, and lining to be put into the canal.

And the commissioners, on their part, agree to pay the said Asa and his associates, on the completion of the aforesaid section, as follows, to wit: for constructing and completing the towing-path, at the rate of three dollars and fifty cents per rod; and for the excavation of rock, forty cents per cubic yard; for gravel under water, thirty cents per cubic yard; excavation of earth, twelve cents per yard; and for embankment, fifteen cents per cubic yard; and for constructing the dam at the head of the falls, one dollar and fifty cents per foot run; and for lining, fifteen cents per cubic yard.

Section No. twelve, consisting of a tow-path, a part of the way similar to the ones above described, excavation of rock, excavation of earth, excavation of gravel under water, lining and constructing stone wall on the river side of the canal, to protect the bank and grubbing.

And the canal commissioners agree to pay the said Asa and his associates, on the completion of the aforesaid section, as follows, to wit: for constructing and completing the towing-path, four dollars per rod; for excavation of rock, thirty-five cents per cubic yard; excavation of earth, eleven cents per yard; for gravel under water, fifteen cents per yard; for lining, fifteen cents per yard; for constructing stone wall, twenty-five cents per cubic yard; and for grubbing, eight hundred dollars per mile.

And the said Asa and his associates further agree, to construct all the waste weirs on the Oswego canal, except the one on section No. thirteen; also, all the road and farm bridges on the Oswego canal.

And the canal commissioners agree to pay them two dollars and fifty cents per foot run for the waste weirs, and eighty dollars for the wood work on each of the road bridges, and one dollar per yard for the stone abutments, and sixty dollars for each of the farm bridges.

And it is furthermore agreed by the said Asa and his associates, that they will, at all times during the progress of the work, conform to such alterations as may be found necessary, and submit to such directions, with regard to the construction of the aforesaid sections and works, as they may receive from the commissioners or their engineer; and if at any time, in the opinion of the principal engineer on said canal, the said Asa and his associates shall not prosecute the work with energy and effect, the said engineer shall have power to declare this contract abandoned; and the said commissioners may thereupon let out the said sections, or any part thereof, to any other person or persons.

And it is further agreed by the parties hereto, that all questions arising in regard to the measurement, or to the execution of the work under this contract, shall be determined by the aforesaid principal engineer, whose decision shall be final and conclusive on the part of the said Asa and his associates.

COPY OF THE TESTIMONY.

Feb. 29, 1828.

Testimony taken by the canal board, in the case of the petition of Cady, Case & Co. for an extra allowance on their contract to construct sections 6, 7, and 12, of the Oswego canal.

Petition read.

Contract read in evidence.

William Jerome was called, and testified, that he was an engineer on the Oswego canal, and had charge of the same during the execution of the contract of the petitioners.

Witness thinks they have received a full and fair compensation for the construction of section No. 6.

Section No. 7 proved to be of a different character than he contemplated. The contract price for earth excavation was twelve cents per yard; the quantity was 23,134$\frac{97}{100}$ yards, on which he thinks a fair allowance would be $1,850 80.

The contract price for rock excavation was forty cents per cubic yard; the quantity excavated was 27,296$\frac{73}{100}$ yards. Witness thinks it was worth fifteen cents per yard more than the contract price, which, on the 27,296$\frac{73}{100}$ yards, amounts to $4,094 50. There was 510 yards of flint rock, for which the petitioners received only forty cents per yard, which was worth $2 50 or $2 10 more than was paid, amounting on the 510 yards to $1,071.

Section No. 12 was almost all altered. There was 4,624$\frac{40}{100}$ yards of rock excavation on this section, for which the contract price was thirty-five cents per yard. Witness thinks it was worth 75 cents per yard; the difference between which, and the amount paid on the quantity excavated, amounts to $1,849 76.

Witness thinks these men were not as much affected as some others, by sickness.

(NO. IV.)

COPY OF THE ORDER OF THE BOARD.

Resolved, That $8,866 06 be paid by the canal commissioners on this contract, as an extra allowance.

(NO. V.)

To the Honorable the Canal Board of the State of New-York:

The petitition of John H. Lamson, Manly Vickery and Amos Mace, respectfully sheweth:

That in the month of August, 1825, Cady, Case & Co. entered into contract with the acting canal commissioner, for the construction of sections 6, 7, and 12, of the Oswego canal; that section No. 6 was underlet to your petitioners, who performed all the work on the said section; that the work to be done by the terms of the said contract, was the construction of a towing-path on the natural bank of the Oswego river, for which the sum of three dollars per rod was to be paid by by the canal commissioners.

That shortly after the work was commenced, the engineer who had charge of the same, directed the towing-path to be constructed by building a wharf in the river, and filling in the same with earth; and that a towing-path was thus constructed on the whole of the section, except the distance of 296 rods, which was constructed on the banks, where the banks were bold, requiring a cutting of about 20 feet in depth, and 12 width, for about 80 rods, for which your petitioners conceive they are entitled to an extra allowance of at least seven dollars per rod, in consequence of being deprived of the favorable part of the contract in constructing the towing-path on the bank, where the work could be easily performed, in comparison with that part where it was difficult and expensive.

That for the construction of the wharf, independent of the filling in, your petitioners have been allowed $3,609 47, with which they are content; but for the filling in, which amounted to 37,250$\frac{30}{100}$ cubic yards, your petitioners have been allowed only 12$\frac{1}{2}$ cents per cubic yard, whereas your petitioners conceive they are justly entitled to at least 25 cents per cubic yard, on an average.

And that in addition to the quantity of 37,250 yards above specified, your petitioners are entitled to an allowance for a much greater quantity of filling in, in consequence of the earth sinking, the precise amount of which your petitioners cannot state, but believe it to be at least 6,000 yards, for which they conceive themselves entitled to 25 cents per cubic yard.

That in addition to the above, there are three other items of claim which your petitioners beg leave to present, and to submit to the judgment of this board, whether they come within the scope of their authority; and if the board shall determine that they can take cognizance of the same, then your petitioners ask such allowance as shall be thought just and reasonable.

First. Your petitioners constructed 154 rods of towing-path, on the natural bank of the river, which was afterwards abandoned by the engineer, and a new towing-path constructed in the river opposite to that which had been constructed, for which 154 rods your petitioners were entitled to $3 per rod, but never received a cent.

Second. Your petitioners cleared 1,063 rods of the river from flood wood, sunken timber and brush, for which they conceive they are justly entitled to a compensation of $2 50 per rod; that in the estimate of the section, your petitioners are allowed 754 rods, at $1 25 per rod, amounting to $942 50, but of which sum they have received only $742 50.

Third. That in consequence of your petitioners detaching 30 men from their section at the request of the canal commissioner, to assist in completing the lock pits for lock No. 2, they were greatly retarded in the completion of their job, were thrown into the latter part of the season, when they worked to great disadvantage by reason of the inclemency of the weather, and sustained a damage of at least $300.

MANLY VICKERY,
AMOS MACE. } For Cady, Case & Co.

February 16*th*, 1828.

I, the subscriber, one of the firm of Cady, Case & Co. certify, that section No. 6, of the Oswego canal, was underlet by the original contractors to John H. Lamson, Manly Vickery, and Amos Mace; that the work on the said section was done by the said Lamson, Vickery and Mace, and they are entitled to the compensation which ought to be made for the same; and to any extra allowance which the canal board may see fit to make, I hereby, in behalf of myself and my associates, consenting that such extra allowance as may be made, may be paid to them.

ABNER P. DOWNER.

February 17*th*, 1829.

(NO. VI.)

Copy of the Minutes and Order of the Board.

February 20*th*, 1829.

The petition having been read, Mr. Wendell was heard as counsel for Joseph H. Lamson, Manly Vickery, and Amos Mace, for extra allowance on section 6, Oswego canal.

They were sub-contractors under Cady, Case & Co. who had received an allowance on their contract in 1828; and in the testimony of Mr. Jerome, given in that case, he swears that on this section, No. 6, a full and fair compensation, in his opinion, was made to the original contractors, and that they were not entitled to any extra allowance.

Therefore,

Resolved, That inasmuch as the subject of an allowance upon this section has been before this board, upon the petition of Cady, Case & Co. in proper persons, and as testimony was taken, and an adjudication of the claim upon its merits had upon the hearing of that petition, the board do not consider it within their powers, or within the exercise of a sound discretion, again to open this claim.

Ordered, That the said communication, together with the documents accompanying the same, be referred to the committee on claims.

Mr. W. Hall, from the committee on engrossed bills, reported, that they have examined the engrossed bill entitled "An act to erect a new town from parts of the towns of Walkill, Goshen, Blooming-Grove, New-Windsor and Montgomery, in the county of Orange," and find the same correctly engrossed.

The said engrossed bill, entitled "An act to erect a new town from parts of the towns of Walkill, Goshen, Blooming-Grove, New-Windsor and Montgomery, in the county of Orange," was read the third time.

Debates were had thereon; and the question being put whether the house would agree to the final passage of the said bill, it was determined in the negative.

MARTIN VAN BUREN.

And then the House adjourned until ten o'clock to-morrow morning.

The petition of sundry inhabitants of the counties of Otsego, Greene and Schoharie, praying for the incorporation of a company to construct a turnpike road from the village of Cooperstown, to intersect the Cobleskill turnpike in the village of Durham, was read, and referred to the committee on the establishment and improvement of roads and bridges, and the incorporation of turnpike companies.

Mr. Burt, from the committee on the establishment and improvement of roads and bridges, and the incorporation of turnpike companies, to which was referred the petition of inhabitants of the counties of Tioga, Steuben and Tompkins, reported:

That, as represented to the committee, the citizens of that part of the country are desirous of having an act of incorporation for the construction of a rail-road from the village of Havana to the Chemung river, the whole distance about eighteen miles. The village of Havana is situated at the head of the navigable waters of the Seneca lake, where, no doubt would be entertained but if a rail-road or canal was to be constructed and in successful operation, would accumulate large quantities of the products of that part of the country; and the village of Elmira, situate on the Chemung river, would receive similar advantages in consequence of being at the other extremity.

From all that extensive country lying southerly from the latter place, comprising parts of the above mentioned counties, and likewise from a large section of the state of Pennsylvania, it would appear reasonable to suppose, that vast quantities of salt, plaster, lumber, wheat, coal and merchandize, would be necessary for the accommodation of its inhabitants, and might warrant the undertaking of capitalists to furnish the facilities of transportation.

If prosecuted, as appears to be contemplated by the petitioners, would add an increase of business to the Erie canal, and that without aid from the state, would be a sufficient inducement, in the mind of the committee, to recommend them favorably to the notice of the legislature to pass a law to incorporate a company with a capital of two hundred thousand dollars, for the purpose of constructing a rail-road from the village of Havana to the village of Elmira, on the Chemung river.

In recommending improvements of this character, the committee have expressed their views on a former occasion, which was favorable, so far as to give the rail-road system an opportunity of being tested in comparison with canals; and feeling an ardent desire that the great state of New-York may prudently progress in the grand march of internal improvements which it has so advantageously begun, with circumspection and a due regard to the interests of the state in the appropriation of its funds.

The committee entertaining a belief that the subject is important not only to this section of the state, but to the interest of the state generally; and being fully conscious of the propriety that a rail-road would possess one advantage over a canal,—it would furnish constant means for transportation at all seasons of the year, and for this reason it might be as desirable as the construction of a canal; either would, no doubt, promote the interest and prosperity of that extensive section of country.

It is represented to the committee, that rail-roads can be constructed at one-half the expense of a canal. If after the trial and experiments have been made in different parts of our state, this should prove so, the information would give new energies to our enterprising citizens, and constitute a strong argument in favor of this species of internal improvement; because it is not enterprise that we lack, it is capital to carry into effect the ingenuity which our geniuses are almost daily exhibiting as the proofs of their skill.

This road, if constructed, is intended to pass over a country admirably calculated for improvements of this kind; it being a gradual ascent from Havana to the summit level, a distance of about eleven miles, and from thence to the Chemung river a gradual descent, a distance of about seven miles. Under all the circumstances connected with the application, the committee have concluded that the enterprise would be useful to the public, and have directed their chairman to ask leave to introduce a bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Burt, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to incorporate the Havana and Chemung rail-road company;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Ordered, That the usual number of copies of the said bill and report be printed for the use of the legislature.

Mr. Burt, from the committee on the establishment and improvement of roads and bridges, and the incorporation of turnpike companies, on the petition of sundry inhabitants of the county of Saratoga, praying for the passage of an act of incorporation to construct a turnpike road from Saratoga-Springs to Waterford, asked leave to report by bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Burt, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to incorporate the Saratoga county turnpike company;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Al Burtis, from the committee on the incorporation of charitable and religious societies, to which was referred the petition of Aaron M. Merchant, Jonas Humbert junior, and others, citizens of the city of New-York, reported:

That the committee have had the petition under consideration; think the object laudable, and that the prayer of the petitioners ought to be granted: They have prepared a bill accordingly, and directed their chairman to ask for leave to introduce the same.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Al Burtis, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to incorporate the New-York sacred music society;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Falley, from the committee on the incorporation of cities and villages, to which was referred the petition of the board of trustees of the village of Buffalo, praying for certain amendments to the act incorporating said village, asked for leave to report by bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Falley, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act to incorporate the village of Buffalo in the county of Erie,' passed April 2d, 1822;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Johnson, from the committee on canals and internal improvements, on so much of the annual report of the canal commissioners as relates to the Cayuga and Seneca canal, asked leave to report by bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Johnson, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act making further appropriation to complete the Cayuga and Seneca canal;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Paige, from the select committee to which was referred the petition of sundry inhabitants of the counties of Montgomery, Saratoga and Schenectady, praying for an amendment to the bill entitled "An act relative to the road from the village of Northampton in the county of Montgomery, to the Mohawk turnpike," passed April 10th, 1828, reported:

That the petitioners represent, that the commissioners named in said act, have examined, surveyed, and laid out the road from the village of Northampton in the county of Montgomery, to the Mohawk river, as authorised by said act: That said road will be of great public advantage: That the said act does not provide for the levying and collection of the damages to the owners of lands in the several towns through which the said road is laid out, as in ordinary cases: That said road was intended for the public benefit: That the same must be abandoned, unless provision is made for the collection of the damages, in the manner provided in cases where roads are laid out by commissioners of highways. The petitioners therefore pray that a law may be passed, authorising the damages to owners of lands to be assessed and paid by the towns respectively through which the road is laid out.

The committee are satisfied that the facts set forth in said petition are true, and that the prayer of the petitioners ought to be granted; and they have accordingly instructed their chairman to ask leave to introduce a bill, containing the provisions desired by the petitioners.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Paige, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act relative to the road from the village of Northampton in the county of Montgomery, to the Mohawk turnpike,' passed April 10th, 1828;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Burt, from the select committee to which was referred the petition of sundry inhabitants of the towns of Amherst, Alden, Clarence and Erie, in the county of Erie, reported:

That the citizens who are petitioners in the present application, reside in the eastern part of the county of Erie: And at present, they receive their goods, and deliver their products which are intended for market abroad, at Buffalo, being the only point where they can reach the Erie canal with the customary loads usually transported in wagons: But at a distance of about twelve miles east of Buffalo, there is a creek called Ellicott's creek, which is susceptible of improvement by means of locks and dams, which will render it good navigation to the Tonewanta creek, which forms part of the Erie canal, at an expense not exceeding ten thousand dollars, and save them great expense in land transportation, as well as about fourteen miles from the village of Buffalo on the canal to where this creek intersects as above mentioned.

They ask for the incorporation of a company, with a capital of ten thousand dollars, for the purpose of making this improvement, and inducing the men who reside in the eastern part of the county, and are willing, to engage with their limited means in this enterprise. The committee do not perceive any objection. The amount of toll which it would be proper for the company to receive, should be prescribed by the canal commissioner who might have charge of the western section of the Erie canal, of which they state they have no objection to his being appointed for that purpose. The amount of business done upon this creek would no doubt be considerable, as at its head is the best water power in that county, and several mills are already in operation, besides being in a very fine wheat country, and of course the transportation of flour would be an important item in sustaining the expense. The committee have therefore prepared a bill, which they ask leave to introduce.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Burt, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to incorporate the Ellicott's creek slack water navigation company;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. W. K. Fuller, from the select committee to which was referred the engrossed bill from the Senate, entitled "An act concerning the state prisons of this state," reported, that they have examined the said bill, and see no reason why the same should not be passed into a law.

Ordered, That the said bill be committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Jones, from the select committee to which was referred the engrossed bill from the Senate, entitled "An act for the relief of William C. Housman and James A. Housman," reported, that they have examined the said bill, and see no reason why the same should not be passed into a law.

Ordered, That the said bill be committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Brown, from the select committee to which was referred the engrossed bill from the Senate, entitled "An act to incorporate the Presbyterian church of Peckskill," reported, that they have examined the said bill, and see no reason why the same should not be passed into a law.

Ordered, That the said bill be committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. M'Crea, from the select committee to which was referred the engrossed bill from the Senate, entitled "An act altering the October term of general sessions of the peace in the county of Delaware," reported, that they have examined the said bill, and see no reason why the same should not be passed into a law.

Ordered, That the said bill be committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Hazeltine, from the select committee to which was referred the engrossed bill from the Senate, entitled "An act to continue the act for the employment of counsel for the purposes therein mentioned," reported. that they have examined the said bill, and prepared an amendment thereto, with which they see no reason why the same should not be passed into a law.

Ordered, That the said bill and amendment be committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Jones, from the select committee to which was referred the petition of sundry inhabitants of the county of Westchester, praying that a law be passed giving them the exclusive privilege of planting oysters adjoining their lands in the waters of the Sound or East river, reported:

That they have had the same under consideration; that the petitioners complain, that the inhabitants of the county of Westchester have the same privilege as themselves in relation to fishing or oystering opposite their lands in the waters of the Sound; and should they plant oysters, they would be the property of those who might take them, inasmuch as those waters are free to the inhabitants of said county, to use them as they may think proper. The committee are well aware that persons owning lands on the waters of the Sound, may be subject to the inconveniences set forth in the prayer of your petitioners; but they doubt the propriety of passing a law which would go to exclude by far the largest proportion of the inhabitants of the county of Westchester, from fishing or oystering on the shores or waters of the sound.

From these considerations, and others which might be suggested, they have come to the conclusion that the prayer of the petitioners ought not to be granted, and that the petitioners have leave to withdraw their petition.

Mr. Speaker put the question whether the house would agree with the committee in their said report, and it was determined in the affirmative.

Mr. Hubbell, from the select committee to which was committed the bill entitled "An act to incorporate the village of Brockport," reported, that the committee had gone through the said bill, made sundry amendments thereto, and agreed to the same; which he was directed to report to the house, and he read the report in his place, and delivered the same in at the table, where it was again read, and agreed to by the house.

Ordered, That the bill be engrossed.

Mr. Phœnix, from the select committee to which was referred the petition of James E. Jones and others, of the town of Cameron, praying leave to construct a dam across the Canisteo river, reported:

That they have had the subject of the petition under consideration; and from their personal knowledge in relation thereto, believe that dams can be constructed in said river, for the purpose of raising a head of water to propel hydraulic works, without impairing or endangering the navigation of said stream: That where hydraulic works are erected on that river, they are essentially useful to the immediate neighborhood.

The committee are therefore of opinion that the prayer of the petitioners ought to be granted, and ask leave to introduce a bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Phœnix, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act authorising James E. Jones to erect a dam across the Canisteo river;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

In pursuance of previous notice, Mr. Johnson asked for and obtained leave to bring in a bill entitled "An act relative to inspectors of lumber in the county of Oneida;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a select committee, consisting of the members attending this house from the county of Oneida, to consider and report thereon.

Mr. Edgerton offered for the consideration of the house, a resolution, in the words following, to wit:

Resolved, That this house do reconsider its vote of yesterday, on the bill entitled "An act to erect a new town from parts of the towns of Walkill, Goshen, Blooming-Grove, New-Windsor and Montgomery, in the county of Orange."

Ordered, That the said resolution be laid upon the table.

The house then proceeded to the consideration of the resolution heretofore offered by Mr. Eldridge: The same was again read, in the words following, to wit:

Resolved, That a committee of nine members be appointed, whose duty it shall be to examine all bills from time to time committed to a committee of the whole house, and report all such bills as in their opinion may with safety and propriety be referred to select committees to be reported complete; but that no bill shall be recommended to be referred, except with the unanimous consent of said committee.

Mr. Speaker put the question whether the house would agree to the said resolution, and it was determined in the negative.

In pursuance of previous notice, Mr. Savage asked for and obtained leave to bring in a bill entitled "An act to incorporate the New-Hartford fire company;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Judd offered for the consideration of the house, a resolution, in the words following, to wit:

Resolved, (if the Senate concur herein,) That the secretary of state is hereby required to cause to be published in a pamphlet form, chapter 20, titles 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7, of the first part of the Revised Statutes of this State; and seven copies thereof to be distributed to each of the town clerks of the several towns in this state, to be by him distributed to the supervisor, overseers of the poor, and the justices of the peace, and their successors in office in such town: And that the expense of such publication and distribution, be paid by the treasurer of this state, upon the warrant of the comptroller, out of any monies in the treasury of this state not otherwise appropriated.

Ordered, That the said resolution be laid upon the table.

The house then proceeded to the consideration of the report of the committee of the whole, on the bill entitled "An act for the relief of Daniel M'Inroy;" the said report being that the committee had gone through the said bill, made sundry amendments thereto, and agreed to the same.

Mr. Speaker put the question whether the house would agree with the committee in their said report, and it was determined in the affirmative.

Ordered, That the bill be engrossed.

The house then again resolved itself into a committee of the whole, on the bill entitled "An act to create a fund for the benefit of the creditors of certain monied corporations, and for other purposes;" and after some time spent thereon, Mr. Speaker resumed the chair, and Mr. Seeley, from the said committee, reported progress, and asked for and obtained leave to sit again.

And then the House adjourned until ten o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. Burt, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act for the relief of the Owego and Ithaca turnpike road company;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Brinkerhoff, from the committee on the militia, to which was referred the message of his excellency the Governor of the 2d March, laying before the Assembly a communication from the Secretary at War, asking a cession of jurisdiction to the United States, over certain grounds purchased by them, and appertaining to the arsenal at Watervliet, reported:

That the committee, in order to obtain such information as might be necessary to a full understanding of the views of the War Department on the subject of this communication, applied to Maj. G. Talcott, of the ordnance, now commanding the arsenal at Watervliet, and agent of the general government to negotiate for this cession of jurisdiction, for information.

Maj. Talcott appeared before the committee; and it appears from deeds and other evidences of fact, (in his possession,) in behalf of the general government, that the following purchases have been made from the accredited owners of the land, for the use of the arsenal: and the evidences of which purchases, to the satisfaction of the committee, are all recorded in the office of the clerk of the county of Albany.

The first purchase was in 1813, for 11 acres 3 roods and 14 perches; the jurisdiction over which has been ceded to the United States of America. The next purchase was in 1823, for about five acres; and the last in 1828, for 30 acres; the jurisdiction of which has not been ceded to the general government, but is now asked for.

Maj. Talcott informed the committee, that considering the advantageous location of the United States arsenal at Watervliet, the advantages of a water communication, affording an easy and cheap facility for the transportation of cannon and other munitions of war to and from this place, it was the intention of the general government not only permanently to maintain, but to enlarge this establishment.

Therefore, to afford room for the additional necessary buildings, particularly the magazine houses, which, for safety, ought to to be built remote from any of the other buildings, a jurisdiction was asked for no more than was necessary for the use of the arsenal.

The committee are not aware of any reasonable objections that may be offered against this further cession. They have advised with gentlemen of respectability residing within the immediate vicinity of this arsenal, and they know of none. But on the contrary, it having been intimated that a national armory may be established near that place, which, in connection with the arsenal, will not only afford employment to workmen, but be advantageous on many other considerations.

The only doubt, in the minds of the committee, has been as to the propriety of ceding the jurisdiction of so large a tract (about 50 acres) to the general government; and that too, almost within cannon shot of the very Capitol of their own state.

The committee, however, apprehend no danger; and believing that no evils will arise from it, have prepared a bill, reserving to this state a concurrent jurisdiction with that of the United States over this tract, in all civil and criminal prosecutions; and they have instructed their chairman to ask leave to introduce the same.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Brinkerhoff, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act vesting in the United States of America, the jurisdiction over a certain piece of land in the town of Watervliet in the county of Albany;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Ordered, That the usual number of copies of the said bill and report be printed for the use of the legislature.

Mr. Falley, from the committee on the incorporation of cities and villages, on the petition of the trustees of the village of Saratoga-Springs, praying for an amendment of their charter, asked leave to report by bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Falley, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to amend an act to incorporate the village of Saratoga-Springs;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. C. L. Livingston, from the select committee, consisting of the members attending this house from the city and county of New-York, to which was referred the memorial from the common council of said city, praying for an extension of the fire limits, reported:

The increase of population, and number of buildings recently erected in the 7th, 8th and 14th wards, require, in the opinion of the committee, that certain portions of said districts should be embraced within what is termed the fire limits. The propriety of such a measure, as the wishes and interests of the owners of property are residents within the several sections above mentioned, appear conclusively from the fact, that no objections have been made thereto; and the usual notices were given, to cause such objections to be made. Considerations of public policy strongly recommend the passage of the law prayed for, and the committee have accordingly prepared a bill, which they ask leave to present.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. C. L. Livingston, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act further to extend the act passed April 11th, 1815, entitled 'An act for the more effectual prevention of fires in the city of New-York;'" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

Mr. Johnson, from the select committee to which was committed the bill entitled "An act relative to inspectors of lumber in the county of Oneida," reported, that the committee had gone through the said bill, and agreed to the same without amendment; which he was directed to report to the house, and he read the report in his place, and delivered the same in at the table, where it was again read, and agreed to by the house.

Ordered, That the bill be engrossed.

A communication from the Surveyor-General was received, and read in the words following, to wit:

The surveyor-general, to whom, and the attorney-general, was referred by the honorable the Assembly the bill entitled "An act in relation to the salt manufacturing lots in the town of Salina, and for other purposes," in the absence of the attorney-general, respectfully reports:

That in his opinion, the second section of the bill requires a limitation which may be supplied by inserting in the third line, after the words "July last," the words on account of their having valuable improvements on them; and also after the word "lots," in the same line, the words remaining the property of the state, and. In the 4th line, for and belonging substitute which belong; at the end of the 6th line, add exclusive of the improvements.

The fifth section will effect an object which the superintendent of the salt springs considers important for the accommodation of business at the springs. He is of opinion that the leases for the salt manufacturing lots Nos. 17 and 18, ought not to be renewed, but left vacant, for the convenience of the pump-works near them; and for this purpose, he thinks the proposed arrangement will be as economical a means as can be adopted.

Presuming that this report embraces all that was intended by the reference, the other parts of the bill are passed by without notice.

Respectfully submitted,
SIMEON DE WITT, Surveyor-General.

March 11th, 1829.

Ordered, That the said bill and report be committed to a committee of the whole, and that the bill be restored to the same place on the general orders of the day, which it occupied at the time of its reference to the attorney-general and surveyor-general.

A communication from the commissioners for draining the Cayuga marshes, was read in the words following, to wit:

TO THE HONORABLE THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF NEW-YORK.

The commissioners for draining the Cayuga marshes, respectfully report, as follows:

The ditch at Jack's reefs was completed on the 26th of January last, and the waters of the Seneca river were let into it on that day. Before the ditch could be finished, strong dams were necessarily erected at each end thereof, to exclude the water of the river. Owing to the extreme severity of the weather, those dams have not yet been wholly removed, but continue to be very considerable obstructions to the passage of the water through the drain. And the channel necessary to be cut from the head of the ditch into the deep waters of the river, has not yet been perfected. Yet, notwithstanding these obstructions, the draining operation, since the water was let into the ditch, has gone on successfully, and has equalled, in its results, our most sanguine hopes and calculations. Cross lake, which crosses the Seneca river about one half of a mile above the ditch, and whose surface is estimated at eight square miles, has already sunk more than four feet. The waters of the river, on Jack's reefs, below the head of the ditch, have fallen so low, that one-half of the bed of the river has been left bare; and it is presumed that soon the water will entirely cease to run in the old bed of the river, and that the whole volume will pass freely through the ditch. On the bar at Musquito Point, twelve miles above the ditch, the water has sunk full three feet; and at Montezuma, along the Cayuga marshes, it has fallen at least eighteen inches, notwithstanding the intervening bar at Musquito Point has in no part been removed. This sinking of the waters has undoubtedly been caused, in some degree, by the coldness and dryness of the winter season; but it is perfectly manifest that it is mostly owing to the powerful passage of the waters through the ditch.

Pursuant to the advice of David Thomas, Esq., who is well known as an able and experienced engineer, a contract has been made for cutting a channel in the bed of the river, at Jack's reefs, to include about twenty thousand yards of excavation. This channel is considered necessary to assist the ditch in carying off the waters in high floods, and to prevent their rising so as to overflow the banks of the river. The bar appears to consist of small stones and gravel; and there is a prospect of draining it at a small expense. The length of the cut will be about fifteen chains, and the depth and price of excavation will be determined on further trial. The work has been commenced, and will, we trust, be vigorously prosecuted.

A contract has also been made, by the advice of Mr. Thomas, for excavating a channel in the bed of the river, on the bar at Musquito Point, one hundred feet wide, four feet deep at the highest part of the bar, and about sixty rods in length. This necessary and important cut will probably cost about five thousand dollars. It will soon be commenced, and will be urged on with the utmost despatch.

The labor and expense of removing the other bars and obstructions in the river, will be, comparatively, very small, and, as we hope, of easy execution.

We deem it a duty, which we owe to the legislature as well as to ourselves, to state, briefly, the principal causes which have impeded and greatly retarded the progress of the works, since they have been under our direction. During the summers, and part of the fall seasons, the unhealthy atmosphere and bad water along the Seneca river, have caused much severe, and in many instances, fatal sickness among the workmen, and have often made it difficult to keep on the works any thing like an adequate number of hands. Important contracts have been abandoned by contractors, under circumstances calculated to occasion great embarrassments and delay. On the breaking up of the last winter. the floods in the river were so heavy, as to break the water wheel which was used to throw the water from the drain; and it was afterwards found to be very difficult to make a wheel sufficiently strong to operate efficiently, any considerable time, during the high floods. A raft of logs was driven agains the dam, which was built across the river for the purpose of carrying the water wheel, and made a large breach. The rains continued through the last summer and most of the fall, and the quantity of water to be thrown from the ditch was very great and perplexing: And in August last, the river unexpectedly broke through the dam, at the head of the drain, and destroying the lower dam, completely inundated the whole work; and it took much time and labor, afterwards, to erect dams sufficiently strong to keep the waters of river from breaking into the ditch.

Under all these embarrassing circumstances, and many more which might be stated, a ditch has been completed, which is at least 264 rods long, 40 feet wide, and, on an average, 24 feet deep; and has been cut through strata of earth and rock extremely difficult of excavation.

The monies expended in the construction of the works, up to this time, amount to very near $80,000. The exact amount cannot now be stated, owing to our not having been able to effect a settlement with one of our contractors. It cannot, however, vary but a few dollars from the sum mentioned.

The total amount drawn by our late treasurer, Doct, Geo. W. Fitch, has been faithfully paid over to us; and all the duties of his office have been ably and promptly performed.

The execution of the works, particularly those at Jack's reefs, cannot fail of greatly improving the navigation of the Seneca river. We learn with pleasure, that a steam-boat of considerable tonnage is now building, and in a state of forwardness, designed to navigate that river.

In conclusion, we express our confident expectations that the important works committed to our charge, will be wholly completed in the course of the present year, and that the great and interesting objects intended by the operations will be fully attained. We have no hesitation in declaring our firm belief, that the Cayuga marshes, and the other drowned lands in the valley of the Seneca river, will be effectually reclaimed, and that what has heretofore been emphatically a region of sterility, disease and death, will soon exhibit an extensive tract of land, free from a pestilential atmosphere, beautiful in location, and of unexampled fertility.

JOHN JAKWAY,
JETHRO WOOD,
Commissioners.

February 28*th*, 1829.

Ordered, That the said communication be laid upon the table; and that the usual number of copies thereof, be printed for the use of the legislature.

A communication from the canal commissioners was received, and read in the words following, to wit:

The canal commissioners, to whom was referred by the House of Assembly the petition of Andrew P. Tillman, claiming an allowance on his contract, for the performance of work on the Cayuga and Seneca canal, respectfully report:

That the petitioner and Wilson N. Brown entered into a contract, on the 28th day of August 1827, for constructing locks No. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, and 10, and sections No. 11 and 12.

An allowance is claimed on that portion of the work, which appertains to the construction of the locks.

The conract prices for this part of the work were, as follows, to wit: for constructing locks No. 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7, at the rate of $181, per foot lift; and fr locks No. 9 and 10, at the rate of $165 per foot lift; which price includes every expense necessary to a full completion of the locks, except excavating the lock pits, for which he was to receive twenty cents per cubic yard, excepting 200 cubic yards of lock pit No. 6, for which seventy-five cents per cubic yard was to be paid. Subsequent to the execution of the contract, the place of the locks was in some respects changed, which increased the quantity of timber, and the expense of their erection.

The pits of locks No. 3, 4, 5, and 9, were located near the margin of the Seneca outlet, and required to be sunk several feet below the surface of the water. The petitioner experienced serious, and no doubt unexpected, difficulties in performing this part of the work, and particularly in excavating the pit of lock No. 9, where the rock was found near the surface, and of the most difficult character.

The pits of locks No. 6 and 7, were mostly rock excavation; and also a portion of the pits of locks No. 4 and 10.

The petitioners contract prices were considerably below the value of the work.

He also claims that he has sustained a loss on other parts of his work.

The claim of the petitioner was presented to the canal board in February, 1828, and an allowance of $6,685 was made on such parts of the work as were rendered more expensive by new directions given by the commissioner or engineer, after making the contract; or where, in consequence of the work proving to be of a different character or description, than it was contemplated to be by the commissioner or engineer, at the time of making the contract.

By a reference to the estimate of the engineer, (which is hereunto annexed,) the nature and extent of the allowance will appear in detail.

It is believed that the petitioner has sustained a loss; but not by any means to the amount set forth in his petition.

Mr. Myers, from the select committee to which was referred the petition of sundry inhabitants of the city of New-York. praying the incorporation of a company to be called the Manhattan gas light company, reported:

It appears to the committee, that the article of inflammable gas is very extensively used in the city of New-York for lighting the streets, as well as public and private buildings, and that its consumption is constantly increasing: That there is but one incorporated company in that city for its manufacture, which is now in operation; and that the demand upon it is so great, that the stock is now, and has for some time been, about seventy per cent above par; and that although another company was incorporated two or three years since for the same purpose, yet that it has never made any use of its privileges, and is confined to that part of the city which lies above Grand-street, where it is not to be expected that this article will for many years to come be much in demand.

The committee are informed, and believe that the gas manufactured by the present company is often of an inferior quality, and sold at a high price; and that great dissatisfaction among the citizens using it, has been thereby produced, inasmuch that many persons have relinquished the use of it, who would be valuable customers of a company which would furnish it pure, and at a reasonable price. The committee are of opinion, that to have the city well and economically lighted, is a matter of public concern; and that this object would be very much promoted by such a competition as would probably be produced by the creation of another corporate company for the purpose of manufacturing this important article.

They therefore think the prayer of the petition reasonable, and ask leave to introduce a bill.

Ordered, That leave be given to bring in such bill.

Mr. Myers, according to leave, brought in the said bill, entitled "An act to incorporate the Manhattan gas light company of the city of New-York;" which was read the first time, and by unanimous consent was also read a second time, and committed to a committee of the whole house.

A communication from the canal commissioners was read, in the words following, to wit:

The canal commissioners, in obedience to a resolution of the honorable the Assembly of the 25th ult., in the following words, to wit:

"Resolved, That the committee on claims be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of William Brayton and eighteen others, praying for a re-appraisal of damages done to their lands by the construction of the Champlain canal, and that the same be referred to the canal commissioners; and that they be requested to report to this house their opinion on the right of the petitioners to relief in the premises"; submit the following report:

The petitioners are the separate proprietors of lands through which the Champlain canal passes.

In the year 1825, they presented their claims for damages to the appraisers, who, after hearing the allegations of the petitioners, and examining the premises upon which the damages were claimed, made their award in each case, allowing damages to some who were most injured by the canal, and to the others awarding that the damages were counterbalanced by the benefits.

The appraisers, in pursuance of the provisions of the law, were bound by their oath of office, to balance the injuries and benefits, and to award damages in such cases only, and to such an amount as in their judgment the latter were counterbalanced by the former. In case of dissatisfaction, an appeal was given from the award of the appraisers, to the board of canal commissioners, if made within the time limited by law, and if not made within that time, the award was to be final and conclusive. None of the petitioners appealed within the time limited, or afterward; and they now ask the legislature for the passage of a law directing another appraisal of their damages.

If the Hudson and Delaware canal company occupied the same relations to the petitioners as the state does, the question which is implied in that part of the resolution of the honorable the Assembly, which requires the canal commissioners to give "their opinion on the right of the petitioners to relief," would be of easy solution. A petition to the legislature under like circumstances, and with a like claim against an incorporated company, or against an individual, could not, it is believed, be entertained; or, if it should produce the passage of a law for a re-appraisal, such law, annulling a statute of limitations ex post facto, and reviving claims which had become legally extinct, would doubtless be adjudged to be void by our highest judicial tribunals, on the ground that it was an unwarrantable interference with private rights.

Indeed, regarded as between individuals, the case presented by the petitioners is so entirely divested of difficulty, and the facts which they disclose are so repugnant to the prayer of their petition, that it ought, perhaps, to be presumed that the legislature did not, in this point of view, intend to require the expression of any opinion on the subject.

It will be assumed, then, in order to comply with the requirement as fully as possible, that the question upon which the expression of an opinion is demanded, involves the inquiry whether the petitioners have a "right" to relief against the state, which they would not have under like circumstances against an individual. A few preliminary remarks, however, on some of the allegations contained in the petition, may, perhaps, be proper.

The petitioners complain that one of the canal commissioners, from the commencement to the time he associated with the appraisers to assess the damages, had expressed an opinion "against the allowance of much, if any, damages, offsetting against the damages, in most cases, the advantages in his opinion." They assume, that "to have their farms cut up and almost entirely ruined from the construction and continuance of the said canal, without any equivalent but the empty sound of advantages, when none exists, nor never, in any human probability, can be realized, is hard in the extreme and grievous to be borne." They complain that the state has exercised "the power and right in the choice of all the appraisers of these damages;" and they aver that "this may be considered by some, as striding some distance in assumption:" and to give a still stronger coloring to their grievances, they deprecate the appointment of one of the appraisers, "after his fixed and determined and declared opinions relative to great advantages to your petitioners." The petitioners state that "they are aware of the law under which these appraisals were made, and of the right of appeal"; "but of this law," (they say,) "and the proceedings necessary under it, in case of dissatisfaction in the allowance, most of your petitioners were ignorant, until the time to appeal had expired; and some of them conceived it almost useless to try to do any thing in getting a fair investigation, understanding the expressed opposition of one of the commissioners, who was attending with the appraisers, and which opposition your petitioners conceived uncalled for from him or any appraiser."

The petitioners further state, that "the appraisers did not take into consideration the expense of fencing, and that since their claims were passed upon, the fences have been neglected; and your petitioners understand that no further appropriation will be made by the state in fencing or repairs." And they allege, that "although this is but a small part of the damages, yet it is unreasonable that it should be borne at the expense of your petitioners, who are not in the least benefitted by the canal."

Such are, in substance, the alleged grievances upon which are founded the claim for a law authorising the re-appraisement of the damages claimed to have been sustained by the petitioners.

No resolution of the canal commissioners has yet been adopted, to abandon the fences on the canals; although such a course of proceeding has been contemplated. Much has heretofore been expended in rebuilding and keeping them in repair, but every effort to preserve them from the influence of that system of privateering which pronounces every species of public property to be a lawful prize, has hitherto been found ineffectual. And the result probably will be, that the canal commissioners will feel it to be their duty to apprise the legislature that no further expenditure will be made by them for this purpose, without some specific legislative authority and direction.

The allegation of the petitioners, that "they are not in the least benefitted by the canal," is worthy of consideration. They are in the aggregate, men of property and respectability, and if their judgments are not under the bewildering impulse of self-interest, are probably entitled to as much credence as would be allowed to any equal number of neighboring individuals in any section of the community.

Some of them reside in the village of Fort-Ann, and others in its vicinity. This village is between forty and fifty miles from the head of tide water at the city of Troy; and considering the badness of the roads at the time the canal was constructed, it will not perhaps be unreasonable to suppose that all the surplus productions of their farms, and all their supplies of merchandize, can be transported by the canal for one-tenth of the sum which it would have cost by land. If this supposition is well founded, it will result that the practical effect of the canal in this respect, has been to place their farms ten times nearer to market, or in other words, within four or five miles of the city of Troy. And if it could be shown that this supposition is much too large, still it is not perceived how it is possible to escape the conclusion that they are benefitted to the extent of the difference in price between water and land transportation, whatever that difference may be. And this is a benefit which will remain during the existence of the canal.

The disbursement of the great amount of money along the line, which was absorbed in the construction of the canal, by creating a market for labor and for all kinds of provisions, must have been beneficial to the petitioners, as well as to others. The money which is annually expended in repairs, by creating a like market in proportion to its amount, cannot, it would seem, be void of benefit. The great increase of travellers and others, which the canal has created along its line, adds to the demand for every surplus production, and thereby gives an accelerating impulse to every branch of industry. If it is alleged that these benefits are imaginary, and not real, let him who makes the allegation answer why it is that flourishing villages are constantly springing up on the borbers of the canals.

If the Champlain canal were not now in existence, and if the petitioners, with all their knowledge of its advantages and disadvantages, had the offer of the canal, on the condition of a relinquishment of every claim and every hope of damages, what would be their decision? Delicacy to them ought perhaps to withhold the answer which forces itself upon the mind.

The owners of farms in every part of the state through which public highways pass, lose the use of the land occupied by the highway, and are moreover obliged to make and maintain the fences; and still, in a great majority of cases, the farms command a higher price than though no highway passed through them. Highways are frequently laid out four rods in width, and consequently occupy as much ground as the canal. But there is no public highway which offers one-fourth as much facility to transportation, or adds one-fourth as much value to the land through which it passes, as the canal does. And yet the canal has been fenced by the state, and damages in most cases have been paid.

The allegation of the petitioners, that one of the canal commissioners acted as an appraiser, who had expressed his opinion "against the allowance of much, if any damages, off-setting against the damages in most cases the advantages, in his opinion," is substantially true. The law required that one of the acting commissioners should be in all cases associated with the appraisers, in order to form a board; and it was thought that the acting commissioner could best perform this duty on the section which had been under his charge. And it is admitted, that he to whom the duty has been assigned by his associates, of drawing this report, is the commissioner against whom the reproaches of the petitioners are directed.

Let it not, however, be understood that these reproaches are made or received with the unkind feelings of personal hostility. If the object of the petitioners could have been attained without imputing injustice and oppression, it is charitably believed that the imputation would not have been made. And could the desire of benefitting themselves and of injuring the reputation of the commissioner, be put into opposite scales, there is no doubt that the former would infinitely preponderate over the latter. He who places himself as an impediment in the path which leads to the public treasury, may expect, if he is not crushed, to be at least trampled on and soiled by the feet which are intent upon gaining its threshold. But cupidity, in such cases, always predominates over malice; nor is the injury, perhaps, ever designed to be greater than will suffice to surmount the obstruction.

The appraisers, in the discharge of their duty, acted under the solemnity of an oath; and if it can be supposed that the commissioner was so regardless of the obligation, as to put its injuctions at defiance for the sake of doing injustice —an injustice which would bring upon him the vengeance of a numerous population, what can be said in extenuation of the conduct of his two associates, who might have made whatever award they pleased? The suggestion that they acted under his influence, is a miserable compliment to their consciences and understandings. And the same imputation is cast upon three of the canal commissioners, in the alleged hopelessness of an appeal.

The charge against the legislature, (which enacted the law providing for the appraisement) that they had exercised the power "in the choice of all the appraisers," and that "this may be considered by some as striding some distance in assumption," is worthy of notice. If the petitioners had been allowed by the law to select the appraisers, they would, doubtless have been saved from any supposed necessity of appealing to any other tribunal. But it may be asked, what possible interest could influence the appraisers, selected as they were, to do any injustice to the petitioners? An injustice of this description could tend only to benefit the state at individual expense; and in such case there would be none to applaud and many to condemn.

The current of legislation has at all times, and on all occasions, set so strongly in an opposite direction, that no public officer, who should perpetrate individual injustice, in order to favor the public, could expect to be sustained. The law respecting the appraisement of damages, implies that the claimant may introduce testimony; but no provision is made to procure witnesses on the part of the public, nor is it made perjury to swear falsely against the state. The law constituting the canal board, has given to that board, by implication, the power of administering oaths to witnesses introduced by claimants, but no power to compel the attendance of witnesses on behalf of the state; nor do any pains or penalties await the grossest of false swearing against the public.

What private individual or incorporated company would make a canal under laws exhibiting such a total absence of every barrier to protect their rights. The rights of the Delaware and Hudson canal company (this company is mentioned, because there is no other canal company in the state,) are secured by law. All their contracts and the demands against them, when once adjusted, are disposed of forever. Nor have they any need of a canal board to hear and to re-hear such claims as are constantly preferred against the state.

The appraisers, the canal commissioners and the canal board, under the laws that have existed and now exist, are constrained to transcend their apparent duty as judges, in order to protect the state; or otherwise, to suffer the most exorbitant claims to be supported by the most extravagant testimony; and they are subjected to the censure of individuals, because they exercise the same functions in behalf of the state that a court of criminal jurisdiction does in behalf of a poor prisoner who is unable to employ counsel, and over whose head pains, penalties and imprisonment are impending.

That any legislature of this state has at any time exercised an "assumption" of power, which has operated to the sacrifice of individual rights and private property, cannot be maintained. In every pecuniary collision between the state and an individual, the state has almost uniformly been the sufferer. A retrospect of legislation for fifty years, will shew an immense amount distributed to individuals, in gifts, grants, loans, and the allowance of claims of all kinds and of every description. And time, which brings debility and decrepitude upon man and the works of his hands, seems to add vigor and maturity to claims against the public. Each successive legislature feels that what has been granted during the current session, is but of small moment to the whole community; and in this way the ceaseless stream flows on unobstructed: a minute of time is regarded by man as a trifling and unimportant period of duration; and thus minute after minute, steals insensibly away, until the whole fund of human life is exhausted.

Every pecuniary claim against the state that is presented to the legislature, or to any public officer vested with discretionary powers in the disbursement of public monies, is necessarily, from the nature of the case, ex parte. Such claim is generally magnified to its greatest possible extent; it is fortified by certificates and affidavits, and is urged and enforced with all the zeal and pertinacity which interest inspires. Nor is there any one with a like interest to contradict or gainsay it. The community is necessarily silent. It is a contest in which there is fearful odds on the side of the individual. The decision of such a claim calls into exercise kind and sympathetic feelings for the one side, while there exists a philosophic indifference for the other. It is the granting of a boon to one who is present, and who earnestly pleads his cause, at the trifling expense of the many who are absent and mute. The success of the claimant will perhaps create in him and his friends, an everlasting debt of graitude, while on the other hand there is none to censure or condemn. The rejection of the claim will excite feelings of resentment, while on the other side there is no one in behalf of the community to bestow applause. What wonder then, that the sympathy and credulity of the legislature should be imposed on at every session by individual importunity? What wonder that a legislature of this state should have been heretofore so far deceived, as to have granted bounty lands to a soldier whose name appeared on the rolls of one of the regiments raised by this state, at the commencement of the revolutionary war, when in fact that soldier, shortly after his enlistment, deserted to the enemy, and fought during the whole contest against his country? What wonder that a legislature of this state should have paid seventy or eighty thousand dollars for a botanic garden, and that a succeeding one should have "cast it like a useless weed away"? What wonder that millions of the public monies should have been dissipated, for which the public have received no advantage whatever?

But in attempting to vindicate former legislatures from the charge of an "assumption" of power to oppress individuals, let not the intention be inferred of imputing to the government of this state, any unusual and uncommon profusion and extravagance. The corporation of the city of New-York, had, within a few years past, incurred a debt (if recollection can be depended on) to the amount of one million, two or three hundred thousand dollars; and the corporation of the city of Albany, a debt to the amount of about two hundred and fifty thousand dollars. And yet the members of the legislature of this state, for the last fifty years, under whose administration the immense fund arising from taxes, quit-rents, auction duties, salt duties, lotteries, and the sale of vast tracts of valuable land, &c., has been nearly dissipated, as well as the successive members of the corporations of the above named cities, have doubtless been as prudent and intelligent individuals, and as economical in their own concerns, as could have been selected in the community.

But for the causes which have in part been stated, public officers cannot manage the pecuniary concerns of a government as economically as they do their own. All governments ever have been, and ever will be the consumers, and not the producers of wealth. They are the graves of productive industry. And to the same extent that their pecuniary concerns with individuals are multiplied, will be the sacrifice to the community.

The experience which the canal commissioners have acquired in the disbursement of millions of the public monies, justifies the assertion that individuals often prefer claims against the public, and urge them with all the earnestness of apparent integrity, which claims are frequently so utterly groundless, that the same individuals would blush to prefer them against a neighbor. Man is required by the decalogue to love his neighbor as himself; and yet how few are there who yield obedience to this divine injunction. But until he shall not only love his neighbor, but the whole community as himself, he will, at every opportunity which is offered, and by every plausible pretext which interest can devise, prey upon the public property. And this propensity, arising from the selfishness which is blended with the mental organization of man, is never met and repelled by a like sensitiveness of interest on the part of the public or its officers.

If these, as general positions, are unsound, why does it happen that every public work costs more than it would cost to an individual? Why does it happen that members of the legislature, at every session, pass laws which dissipate the public funds, while as individuals they are careful and economical of their own? Why does it happen, that in loans of money made by the state to individuals on mortgage upon land, the land is abandoned to the state, while mortgages given upon purchases of land from the state are generally paid? Why does this happen, except that the money in the first instance is worth more than the land, and the land in the second instance is worth more than the money; and in both instances the state the loser, and the individual the gainer to the amount of the difference? Why otherwise does it happen, that in every pecuniary transaction with individuals, (as a general rule,) the state is a sufferer?

No man would apply to the public for a loan or any other favor which might be procured from individuals without legislative interposition, unless he expected to procure the loan or the favor below its market value, or on terms more favorable to his interest than individuals would give: and whatever advantage he gains in this way, is so much loss to the community.

If government makes an investment, or an expenditure, which does not return the capital with interest, the loss to the community is precisely the same, as under like circumstances it would be to an individual. There are not two kinds of economy, any more than there are two kinds of morality, or two kinds of results from the same mathematical premises. If two and two make four in all calculations between man and man, the same premises cannot produce six in an estimate between the government and an individual.

It has been supposed by some, that governmental munificence to individuals is not an evil, and that the disbursement of public monies in the community, even where no return of capital is expected, produces great benefits by adding an impetus to industry. That such is, to some extent, the temporary effect, can not be denied; but this benefit is necessarily local. And if it were general, it might be compared to the transitory benefit which an individual would enjoy, who, finding himself chilled with cold, should set fire to his house in order to warm himself by the consuming heat. In both cases, the temporary benefit would be succeeded by a loss nearly total. It is true that those individuals in the community, whose wealth should be increased by the disbursement, would in a like ratio be enabled to bear taxation; but this trifling gain to the community, would probably bear no greater proportion to the whole loss, than the ashes would to the value of the building.

If it is "right" for an individual to receive $100, or any other sum from the state, without an equivalent consideration; then it is "right" for every individual in the community to receive a like sum; or else there is fallacy in the declaration that "the rights of all men are equal." That the public should be just to individuals in its dealings with them, is an obvious principle; but legislative liberality seems to be a misnomer, and should be denominated injustice to the community; for how can it be called liberality in him who gives what is not his own? Legislative munificence is the road to debt, and debt leads to taxation; and that the latter is an evil, it is not difficult to maintain. If the whole amount of tax which might be imposed by any government, should be immediately returned to the individuals from whom it had been drawn, still it would follow, that all the labor of collection and distribution would be an entire loss to the community, because that labor is wholly unproductive of wealth. But when it is considered that the sum annually collected is never to be returned—that the burden falls upon every class and description of men—upon "the halt, the maimed and the blind"—and that the tax-gatherer, like the king of terrors, knocks at the cottage of the lowly and the poor, as well as at the mansion of the rich, it must be admitted that taxation is the most durable and oppressive calamity that the government of this state have the power of inflicting upon the community.

The commercial advantages enjoyed by the citizens of New-York and Albany, doubtless enable them to bear taxation with less inconvenience than it could be borne by all the citizens of the state who do not possess those advantages; and yet the load which is cast upon them by the interest of debt, and by contingent expenses, is annually deplored. But if this state, fifty years ago, had possessed no sources of revenue from lands, &c., the same course of legislation which has prevailed, must have accumulated, ere this, an amount of debt and taxes upon the whole population, superior to the amount under which, at present, the citizens of New-York and Albany labor. What would have been the situation of these cities at this time, if such double taxation had pressed upon them? The accession of foreign capital and enterprise would have been checked; for no man, other things being equal, will lay his bones, and leave his posterity, in a land of taxation. But the avails of public lands, and other sources of revenue, having been already nearly extinguished, a resort to annual taxation to defray the ordinary expenses of government, is near at hand; and when once imposed, can never afterwards be discontinued, without contracting debts by borrowing on public credit. And should the same current of legislative munificence as has prevailed, sweep along for fifty years to come, it is not difficult to foresee, that even the next generation will be overwhelmed with grievous burdens.

There is no other means of creating wealth, than by productive labor; and every dollar which is unproductively expended by government, is a tax to that amount upon the industry of the community. The evil consequences resulting to an individual from his pecuniary extravagance in contracting debts, terminate with his existence; but the same consequences arising from like causes in public functionaries, who are entrusted with the funds of the public, and with the power of contracting debts, communicate their disastrous effects in perpetuity, because communities never die.

If the true test of every human action is its consequences; and if that act is the best which has the strongest tendency to augment the sum of human happiness, and that the worst, which tends the most directly to an opposite result; it is not perceived why a want of economy in public expenditure is not more reprehensible than want of economy in a private individual. And if economy in an individual is a virtue, economy in a public functionary would seem to be infinitely more worthy of the appellation.

Whatever is dissipated by government, is a tax to the same amount upon the productive labor of the governed. If the value of a dollar is a day's labor, then every dollar which is unproductively expended, imposes a day's labor upon the community.

Should a legislature of this state pass a law consigning an individual, upon whom no offence whatever was charged, to a year's hard labor, the feelings of humanity would revolt at the injustice. But, adopting the supposition that 250 days' labor is the average number performed annually by the laboring classes, (deducting Sabbaths, sickness and other contingencies,) it will follow that every amount of $250, which is dissipated in legislation by grants or unproductive expenditures, is tantamount to a sentence of condemnation upon the community, to a year's hard labor. And in both cases, the labor would be imposed upon the innocent and unoffending. It is true, that the labor imposed by governmental profligacy, is not "solitary"; and those who suffer under the sentence, have all the melancholy consolation which can be derived from a community of misery.

The state of New-York might, perhaps, borrow on its own credit, hundreds of millions of dollars, and distribute the money among the present generation of its citizens, leaving the grievous load of debt to be paid by postority. But who would not recoil with horror from such a proposition? And if the principle is manifestly immoral and wrong, can any approximation to it be right?

Posthumous praise or censure, it may be said, cannot affect him upon whom they are bestowed: And yet every cultivated mind feels an instinctive desire of the former, and dread of the latter. Was not this desire instilled into the human heart by the beneficent God of the widow, the fatherless and the poor, as a kind monitor to plead, in anticipation, their future cause;—to admonish man, by the sufferings of humanity, from which himself cannot escape, not to add gratuitous burdens to the necessary ills of life?

A sincere conviction of the truth of the foregoing considerations, induces the conclusion that an individual is not, in any case, entitled against the state to any other relief, than would be his due, under like circumstances, from another individual. And the petitioners having had the same measure of right dispensed to them, that one individual could enforce against another by the laws of community, which are founded on the principles of justice, the "opinion" is clearly entertained, that they have no "right" to any other or further relief.

Respectfully submitted,
In behalf of the canal commissioners,
S. YOUNG,

11*th March*, 1829.

Ordered, That the said communication be referred to the committee on claims, and that the usual number of copies thereof be printed for the use of the legislature.

A message from the Governor, delivered by his private secretary, was read, in the words following, to wit:

TO THE ASSEMBLY.

GENTLEMEN,

I have the honor to lay before you a letter from Mrs. Elizabeth Hamilton, first directress of the Orphan asylum of the city of New-York, together with a petition soliciting the aid of the legislature. The facts stated in the communication signed by this venerable and worthy matron, shewing the successful operations of the institution over which she presides, and in the properity of which she takes so lively an interest, reflect the highest honor on those to whom its affairs have been entrusted; and cannot, I am confident, fail to secure the early, respectful, and favorable consideration of the legislature.

MARTIN VAN BUREN.

Albany, March 12, 1829.

Ordered, That the said message, together with the message accompanying the same, be referred to the committee on colleges, academies and common schools.

A message from the Governor, delivered by his private secretary, was read, in the words following, to wit:

TO THE SENATE AND ASSEMBLY.

GENTLEMEN,

The President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, has appointed me Secretary of State of the United States; and I have felt it my duty to accept the unsolicited and distinguished honor which has thus been conferred upon me.

This decision makes it necessary that I should resign the office of Governor of this State, to which I have recently been elected.

The high and just distinction universally accorded to this office, and the flattering manner in which it was bestowed upon me by the people, are of themselves sufficient to impose upon me, in the step I am about to take, a responsibility of the most impressive character. But these considerations, imposing as they are, are greatly enhanced by the deep consciousness I entertain of the many and unmerited favors conferred upon me by this my native State—favors which have excited on my part, feelings of gratitude, that will, I hope, be as permanent in their influence, as they were just and sincere in their conception.

The latter portion of my public life having been chiefly devoted to the affairs of the general government, I indulge the hope that the place to which I have been called, will enable me to make myself more useful, not only to our fellow-citizens of the Union, but to the people of this State, than I could be in my present station. For although the State of New-York, from the extent of her territory, the abundance of her resources, and the magnitude of her population, possesses in herself the elements of a great empire, and already presents interests deserving the highest care; yet under our confederated system, these very considerations give to her a paramount interest in the just operation of the Federal Government. It is, therefore, under the full conviction that our constituents are at least as deeply interested in the successful conduct of the important affairs with which I am hereafter to be connected, as in the administration of those which appertain to the chief magistracy of this State, that I have come to the conclusion already stated. And with these impressions as to the course of public duty, I do hereby resign the office of Governor of the State of New-York, together with that of Regent of the University thereof.

The few months during which the executive power has been entrusted to my hands, have been sedulously devoted to the service of the State; though I cannot flatter myself, so far as I am individually concerned, that much has as yet been done to promote the public good. I have, however, the best reasons to hope for the most beneficial results to our constituents from our joint labours, and more especially from the efforts which you will continue to make in this respect. This confidence is justly increased by the conviction that I leave the executive department in the hands of one with whose character and qualifications I have long been intimately acquainted. If ample talents, and a sound discriminating judgment—if integrity and singleness of purpose, and truly republican principles, furnish any just grounds for expecting a safe administration of the government, that expectation, I am persuaded, may, in the present instance, be fully indulged.

Having thus surrendered the trusts with which I have been honored, allow me to tender you my sincere acknowledgments for the uniform courtesy and kindness with which you have co-operated with me in the discharge of our public duties; and let me add the assurance, that in whatever situation I may be placed, the interest and the glory of New-York, shall be the objects of my unceasing solicitude and most vigilant exertions.

MARTIN VAN BUREN.

Albany, March 12, 1829.

Thereupon,

On motion of Mr. Mann,

Resolved unanimously, That the congratulations of this House be presented to His Excellency Martin Van Buren, late Governor of this State, on his appointment to the office of Secretary of State for the United States; and that while we deeply feel our separation from one with whom we have been associated in the discharge of important public duties, as well as in social and friendly intercourse, we cannot forbear to felicitate the republic on the acquisition of his services in the councils of the nation.
